The Western New York Medicaid Population

Western New York's Medicaid population is concentrated in the region's two largest cities, Buffalo and Niagara Falls in Erie and Niagara Counties. In parts of both municipalities the proportion of residents who are enrolled in the Medicaid program exceeds fifty percent. Other areas where the proportion of Medicaid participation is high include Lackawanna in Erie, Dunkirk and Jamestown in Chautauqua, and ZIP codes in Orleans, Cattaraugus and Allegany Counties. This data maps the pattern of both urban and rural poverty across Western New York and highlights where health care need is also concentrated. In June 2014 the US Census Bureau ranked the City of Buffalo as the 4th poorest city in the nation, where nearly 27 percent of the population lives in poverty, nearly two thirds under 200% of the federal poverty level.

I. Overview of CNA Approach and Data Sources

Process and Methods Used:

The Western New York (WNY) Community Needs Assessment (CNA) has been jointly conducted and led by two “Performing Provider Systems” – Catholic Medical Partners/ Catholic Health System and Millennium Collaborative Care (comprising Erie County Medical Center, Kaleida Health, Niagara Falls Memorial Medical Center, the McGuire Group and the Safety Net Association of Primary Care Affiliated Providers, SNAPCAP). They have collaborated on the production of this community health needs assessment to inform their selection of projects and provide data, analysis and insights needed to further develop project plans.

The WNY Community Needs Assessment was compiled in three separate pdf packages:

VOLUME ONE- CNA SUMMARY (this document)

VOLUME TWO- CNA ASSESSMENT DETAILS

VOLUME THREE- CNA RESOURCE INVENTORY

The detailed Volumes (Two and Three) were compiled by the University at Buffalo Regional Institute, working closely with HMS Associates, the P2 Collaborative of Western New York, and FTI Consulting Center for Healthcare Economics and Policy.

The Volume One, the CNA Summary Report (compiled from Volumes Two-Three and additional sources as needed) was orchestrated by the University at Buffalo Primary Care Research Institute with extensive assistance from analytic content experts from Catholic Medical Partners, Niagara Falls Memorial Medical Center, Erie County Medical Center, FTI Consulting Center for Healthcare Economics and Policy, and Computer Task Group.

Making a comprehensive assessment of community health needs in an area as large and diverse as the eight-county Western New York region required the integration of a wide array of information and data types, including multiple sources of community engagement. Quantitative data sources included basic demographics, indicators of “community structure” or social determinants of health need, and detailed health care data describing system- wide performance, quality of care and population health status. Together, using composite indices, these provide a powerful set of measures to understand in concrete terms the health of the region, how health care is being delivered, and what are the gaps in the health system and community resources.

Three community engagement approaches were used to gather extensive qualitative data that provided dimension and human context to the numbers, providing us with the means to explain some of the dynamics at play in our health care system today:

1. Regional Health Needs Survey- completed by more than 7,000 people
2. Focus Groups- 16 “community conversations” engaging people served by the system to better understand those patient perspectives.
3. Key Informant Provider Interviews- a series of 42 interviews with providers from every part of the region and every phase of the health care system from primary care to mental health and behavioral care to emergency department settings.

Information and Data Sources Used:

In addition to the extensive qualitative data sources listed above, the following quantitative data sources were used to conduct this community needs assessment:

- DSRIP Performance Data Dashboard (for Medicaid Domain 2 and 3 metrics; zip and county level).
- New York State Prevention Agenda Data Dashboard (for Population Domain 4 metrics, county level).
- SPARCS Data (for additional needs assessments not covered by Domain 2, 3, or 4, county level).
- CDC Mortality Data (for cause of death needs assessment, county level).
- US Census (for demographic profiles and assessment, county, zip, and tract level).
- Statewide Perinatal Data system, Western New York dataset (county and zip level).

- New York State Extended BRFFS Survey (for chronic disease prevalence estimates, county level).
- Multiple Sources for provider and resource inventories (DSRIP, NPI database, D&B, 211 Information Referral, and other miscellaneous sources).

II. Healthcare Provider Infrastructure Supporting Joint Approach by Two PPSs

II(A) Available healthcare infrastructure and environment

The table below presents an overview of the health care infrastructure across three sub-regions of the Western New York area. The tertiary care center of the region and most of the health care providers are in Erie County. The North region is dominated by Niagara County and the South region by Chautauqua County, both due to major transportation routes to various small cities.

There are currently 22 hospitals providing acute care services across Western New York. The inpatient occupancy rate varies from 69% in the Central region to 47% in the South region. Rural hospitals have greater challenges with occupancy and minimum staffing requirements. In total there are on average 1,240 not in use.

There are currently 11 ambulatory surgery centers and 20 urgent care centers, highly concentrated in the more urban counties. There are 110 PCMH-certified primary care locations, 21% of the total 512 locations. The non-PCMH locations are underdeveloped, lacking the communication and care coordination infrastructure necessary to provide improved care to Medicaid beneficiary populations. There are 6 DOH designated Health Homes in the region. There are 4 FQHCs with 10 locations, 11 ambulatory surgical centers, and 20 urgent care centers.

About 13% of the 1,416 primary care providers in the region are designated safety net. Of these 1,416 primary care providers, 1,017 are physician providers and 15% of them are safety net. Large portions of the inner city and rural areas of the region are designated as population Health Professional Shortage Areas (HPSAs). The ratio of Medicaid population to Safety Net PCP is excessively high (over 4,500:1) in Niagara and Allegany Counties and high (over 2,250:1) in Erie, Wyoming, and Chautauqua Counties.

There are 812 dental locations covering the entire region. However only about 3% are safety net providers.

Behavioral health is a key issue in WNY, with a severe shortage of psychiatrists and psychologists compared to NY State. On average, NY State has almost twice as many psychiatrists and psychologists per beneficiary compared to WNY. Orleans County has no Psychiatrists and most other small rural counties have no Pediatric Psychiatrists. There are 521 behavioral health locations, ranging from inpatient mental health clinics to weekly substance abuse support programs. Stigma about accessing mental health services tends to result in patients accessing services late, rather than accessing preventive or early treatment.

There are 74 nursing home facilities with a total bed capacity of 10,120. Projected estimates of public need for beds indicate an excess 499 beds that are predominantly in Central region (239) and South (288).

Methodology used for Primary Care Analysis in Table III(B)(1) above- In the Salient data query system, primary care providers are considered to be those in primary care disciplines (ie: Family Medicine). However, many primary care disciplines like Family Medicine do not work in primary care settings (many are hospitalists or ED physicians). For the purpose of the analysis in the table above, primary care providers are all providers practicing in primary care locations. The rationale for this is that the primary care location is the unit of care that is recognized as PCMH by the NCQA, not the provider.

The sources for the above analysis started with an all-provider data base from the DSRIP Dashboard. A current primary location database maintained by the UB Primary Care Research Institute was then matched to the DSRIP provider file to determine which providers were working in primary care settings, regardless of discipline, including MD, DO, NP, PA, LSW, CDE, or other credentialed providers). Furthermore, all providers at each primary care location were considered primary care, since they are practicing in a primary care setting. Therefore, primary care providers above the above table include more than just physicians- they are all licensed providers in the primary care setting. Given the rationale for considering all providers in the care team to be primary care, the numbers in the above table will not reconcile with Salient queries.

Shortages: As shown in the Table III(B)(1) above, about 13% of the 1,416 primary care providers in the region are designated safety net. Of these 1,416 primary care providers, 1,017 are physician providers and 15% of them are safety net. Large portions of the inner city and rural areas of the region are designated as population Health Professional Shortage Areas (HPSAs). The City of Buffalo has a high need designation due to many PCPs not practicing full time outpatient in high poverty areas due to teaching, precepting, inpatient, and suburban service location obligations. The ratio of Medicaid population to Safety Net PCP is excessively high (over 4,500:1) in Niagara and Allegany Counties and high (over 2,250:1) in Erie, Wyoming, and Chautauqua Counties. Working with AHEC partners, it is essential to influence primary career choice and to better place physicians in safety net PCP settings.

PCMH Status: Only 21% (110) out of 512 primary care locations in the region are currently NCQA recognized as PCMH facilities. Outside of Erie and Niagara Counties the number of PCMH locations is extremely low. Most of the 110 PCMH locations achieved recognition with the help of practice facilitators over the last five years using the evidenced based TRANSLATE model. It is apparent that practice facilitators will be essential during the “process years” of DSRIP in all regions.

Midlevel Workforce in PCP Settings: Only 22% (306) of the primary care providers are midlevel providers (PA or NP). Most midlevel providers are currently working in specialty or hospital settings. Working with AHEC partners, it is essential to influence primary care career choice and to better place midlevel professionals in safety net PCP settings.

Care Management Personnel in PCP Settings: In certain segments the health care system, there are virtually no PC personnel devoted exclusively to the care management of high risk complex population. Creating this function and workflow in primary care settings capable of interacting across all settings, is essential to reducing avoidable hospitalization and ED visits. This is the single most significant gap in PCP functionality that must be in place to transition to value based reimbursement. This care management is tied closely to the need for enhanced HIE and inter-operability. This new functionality will also be the backbone of meeting PCMH 2014 standards across the region.

II(B)(2) Bed Capacity (Hospitals & SNFs)

Hospital Beds: The following Bed Capacity analysis used Cost Reports to consistently extract information for every hospital in the region. The inpatient occupancy rate varies from 69% in the Central region to 47% in the South region. Rural hospitals have greater challenges with occupancy and minimum staffing requirements. In total there are on average 1,240 not in use. If 75% of these unused beds were to be deactivated, that would amount to 930 excess bed reduction (569 in Central, 168 in North, and 193 in the South region). Presumably such a deactivation of beds would not have workforce reduction implications if these unused beds are largely unstaffed, or if reuse of the facilities were possible using redeployed staff.

DSRIP Inpatient Reduction Impact: The combined DSRIP 5-year goal for 25% Medicaid reduction of avoidable admissions (adult/pediatric avoidable and readmissions) in the region is 1,511. This amounts to approximately 1% of current admissions (165,888), so over five years the impact will be minimal with feasible transitioning over time. With an average FTE per admission of 0.13, we expect 188 FTEs will be reduced (redeployed or retrained) over five years (most in the Central region).

Table II(B)(2)i Inpatient Bed & Workforce Reduction Estimates	Central Region (Erie, Genesee, Wyoming)	North Region (Niagara & Orleans)	South Region (Allegany, Cattaraugus, Chautauqua)	WNY Region

The Medicaid 25% reduction of preventable ED visits in the region is 35,053. This amounts to approximately 5% of current ED visits (659,273), so over five years the impact will be minimal with transitioning feasible over time. With an average FTE per visit of 0.0016, we expect 48 FTEs will be reduced (redeployed or retrained) over five years (most in the Central region).

II(B)(2)iv Estimated Bed Need for RHCfs: The following table contains projected estimates of public need by county for the planning target year 2016 for residential health care facility (RHCF) beds as determined by NYSDOH. The excess RHCF beds (499) are predominantly in Central region (239) and South (288). Presumably the transitions to be used to eliminate the excess RHCF capacity in certain areas will redeploy such facilities for alternative assisted living types of settings.

Table II(B)(2)iv Estimated Bed Need for RHCfs	Central Region (Erie, Genesee, Wyoming)	North Region (Niagara & Orleans)	South Region (Allegany, Cattaraugus, Chautauqua)	WNY Region

(3) Behavioral Health (BH) Integration (current status)-

No BH Primary Care Integration- With a few exceptions, there is little meaningful integration of behavioral health with primary care due in large part to the structural barriers (regulatory, confidentiality, lack of interoperability, lack of cross training, etc.) that exist between the medical and behavioral health systems. With the exception of Psychiatrists, physicians are not well trained in behavioral health and yet primary care physicians are medical providers that serve the behavioral health population (with the exception of the seriously mentally ill). Behavioral health conditions have a profound effect of the medical management of chronic complex disease.

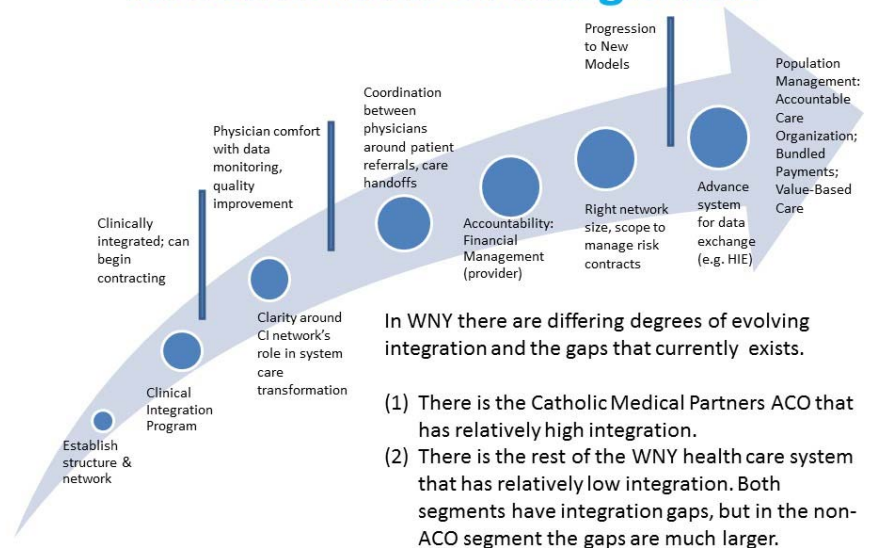

Workforce Implications to Achieve BH PC Integration- The emerging Health Home agencies that collectively cover the WNY region, will be major infrastructure for operationalizing this integration. In addition there is a need to create new functionality with the primary care setting to provide dedicated workflow, roles, and responsibilities for this integration to happen in meaningful ways. In some PCP settings dedicated care management staff may be necessary for the integration of high risk behavioral health population. An ideal care management workers in the PCP office would be the Licensed Mental Health Counselor (not presently credentialed by Health Plans) and more Licensed Social Workers. These behavioral health trained disciplines imbedded in the PCP setting would overcome many of the professional interface barriers. In areas with concentrations of seriously mentally ill, it may be effected to embed PCP providers in the behavioral health settings in targeted locations.

(4) Care Integration across the entire Health Care System -

Differing Degree of evolving care integration – As described in the schematic below, in Western New York there are two distinct segments in the health care market that differ greatly in degree of integration and the gaps that currently exists: (1) The ACO segment (Catholic Medical Partners); and (2) the non-ACO segment (the rest of the health care system). Some integration gaps are common to both segments and some integration gaps apply more to the non-ACO segment.

Patient Transition Gaps at Hospital Discharge (common to both segments)- With few exceptions, there is no formal functionality built into hospital discharge that is capable of navigating high risk patients (coming from all PPSs) to actively prevent readmission. This missing transition function should include: (a) connection to facilitated enrollment for the uninsured; (b) connection to new PCP and first appointment; (c) reconnection or alerting existing PCP and next appointment; (d) connection to home care if needed under supervision of PCP; and (e) connection to immediate community or family supports if needed.

The Evolution of Integration

Patient Triage Gaps at Emergency Departments (common to both segments)- With few exceptions, there is no formal functionality built into ED workflow that is capable of triaging patients presenting with non-emergent care needs to actively avoid reoccurring preventable ED visits. This missing triage function should include: (a) connection to facilitated enrollment for the uninsured; (b) connection to a new PCP and first appointment; and (c) reconnection or alert to existing PCP and next appointment.

Patient Navigation Gaps in Crisis Intervention Community Settings (common to both segments)- With few exceptions, there is no integrated functionality in crisis intervention community settings that is geared to activate and connect the uninsured and non-utilizing high need population to the health care delivery system. This missing navigation function should include: (a) assessing level of patient activation need; (b) connection to facilitated enrollment for the uninsured; and (c) connection to regular PCP and first appointment.

Care Management Gaps in PCP Settings (this pertains mostly to Non-ACO segment): In the non-ACO segment of the health care system, there are few PCP personnel devoted exclusively to the care management of the high risk complex population. Creating this function and workflow in primary care settings (capable of interacting across all settings), is essential to reducing avoidable hospitalization and ED visits. This is the single most significant gap in PCP functionality that must be in place to transition to value based reimbursement. This care management function (as well as the other gaps in hospital discharge, ED, and community settings) is tied closely to the need for enhanced HIE and inter-operability across all settings. Care management of high risk complex patients will also be the backbone for meeting PCMH 2014 standards across the region.

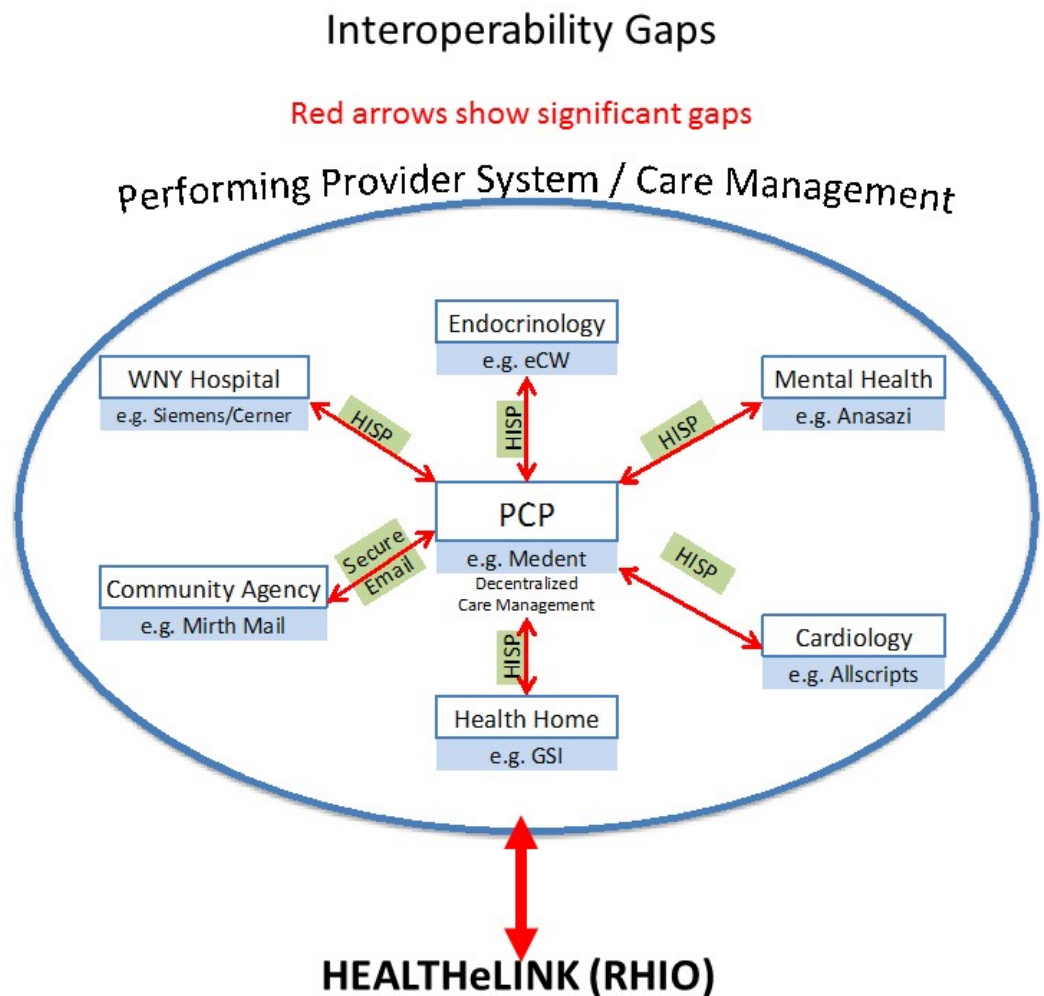

(5) EMR/EHR infrastructure & level of interoperability-

Gaps in interoperability between and across settings- The diagram below represents the current community interoperability gaps with red arrows. The level of enhanced communication and care management data sharing between primary care and specialists, mental health, health homes, community support agencies does not exist and the interoperability with hospitals and pharmacies needs to be enhanced.

Gaps in Data contributed to the HIE- To achieve the functionality described above, EHRs with MU are required across multiple settings with the healthcare system, and various interoperability technologies are required in order to share critical data in a timely and effective fashion to support both direct patient care and population health management needs. The following are major gaps in Interoperability identified by community partners:

The following are major gaps in Interoperability identified by community partners:

- Data from outpatient practices: Exists but only being done in two practices. This is accomplished by CCD upload at the end of each encounter, and/or when a change occurs.

- ED discharge reports: currently received only from one facility.
- Hospital discharge reports: currently received from most facilities, but timeliness is often an issue.
- Information to perform medication reconciliation: Medications at hospital discharge are received only from a portion of hospitals. Pharmacy data is received into HIE from Surescripts from two out of five major pharmacy chains. Information about adverse drug events other than allergies is not available.

Gaps in Patient Consent to participate in RHIO-

Interoperability via the HIE requires patient consent. The adjacent table summarizes the rate of consent in the general population. There is currently a gap of about 55% (more so in rural counties) in patient consent.

The strengths of the current RHIO assets are significant-

- Significant clinical data is already available via the exchange
- WNY has a community level consent model with more than 40% of the entire region’s population having completed the consent process. We estimate that approximately two thirds of high utilizers are consented.
- Patient event notifications, e.g. ED visit, are available.
- HEALTHeLINK’s reporting and analytics environment is robust and licensed for community use.
- All WNY hospitals are participants and are submitting electronic Admission, Discharge and Transfer (ADTs) notifications.
- 95%+ of all labs and 90%+ of all radiology clinical results are accessible.
- Approximately 600 practices (75% of total) are HEALTHeLINK participants.
- 300+ practices with 18 different EMR vendors are connected with electronic results delivery.
- Integration with EMRs underway (Medent currently. Working with Allscripts, eCW) for upload of CCDs at the close of a patient encounter.

(B) Community Resources Gaps and Integration Needs

Western New York has a broad array of community resources spanning all counties. With 437 food banks, including food pantries and soup kitchens, as well as community gardens and farmers markets. There are 370 shelter programs, including agencies that provide housing services to special populations, such as: victims of domestic violence, people living with HIV/AIDS, people with mental illness, and homeless veterans. There are 199 basic needs programs that provide clothing and furniture.

There are 184 local government agencies such as food stamp programs and Medicaid offices located in each county. There are 317 employment support services such as job centers, located predominantly in counties with urban areas. There are 121 youth development programs, including those designed to keep at-risk youths away from gun violence and substance abuse. There are 487 education programs, including schools, colleges, and community-based organizations providing educational services. Some of these organizations focus on special populations such as children with emotional disturbances, at-risk youth, immigrants, and refugees. There are approximately 16 programs that offer alternatives to incarceration services located in Erie and Niagara Counties.

A significant asset that ties these resources together is an online 211 Information referral system that is well developed. However many medical providers are not aware of these resources and not geared to assess patients for social determinants of health and to actively assist patients in accessing these resources. Connected chronic disease patients to community supports is one of the most neglected components of the Chronic Care Model to improve and sustain self-management skills.

In the region there are 42 organization involved with crisis intervention services. They typically do not have effective protocols to deescalate behavioral health crisis situations and to activate and connect beneficiaries with the health care system. Most crisis services are local with limited coordination across the region and there is virtually no interoperability with the RHIO.

There are 91 transportation service programs, including those providing transportation needs to seniors and the disabled. However, transportation is a pervasive problem in ensuring access to health care for the poor and nearly poor. Many low-income households lack access to a vehicle, public transit services in the region are weak or non-existent outside the metropolitan area, and use of Medicaid funded services requires significant advance notice for pick-up and drop off. These challenges contribute to problems with no-shows to primary care appointments.

IV. Community Demographics & Diversity

Western New York is an eight county region with over 1.5 million population. In general, the African-Americans and Latinos/Hispanic population is most at-risk populations, as are people over age 65 and women of child-bearing age (14-44 years). All of these indicators correlate closely with measures of poverty as do levels of educational attainment, single parent households and people born in a foreign country. The number of households without access to a motor vehicle is also another powerful indicator of the ability of people to meet their health needs.

Some key observations across these indicators include:

- African-Americans are heavily concentrated in the cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls and constitute a majority of the population in several ZIP codes in each city. African-Americans also live in other locations around the metropolitan area, such as Cheektowaga.
- Latinos/Hispanics follow a somewhat less concentrated residential pattern, with higher concentrations on Buffalo's West Side, Lackawanna and Niagara Falls, but also in Dunkirk, Jamestown, Orleans County and other rural areas elsewhere.
- Non-English speakers are distributed in a more complex pattern across the region. Many live in Buffalo, especially on the West Side, with its heavy refugee populations, or in Lackawanna, where many Yemeni and other Middle Easterners live. There are other clusters of non-English speakers in Jamestown, in Amherst around the University at Buffalo, and in Amish country in Cattaraugus County that may or may not be indicative of greater health need.
- Persons over 65 years reside in a still different pattern, with a lower proportion of older persons in the central cities and a much higher percentage in the suburbs of Buffalo, such as Amherst, Clarence and Elma, and in Lewiston outside of Niagara Falls. Other areas with a higher proportion of seniors are scattered across more rural areas in the region.
- Women of childbearing age (15-44 years) reflect a crucial category of potential health care need. However, outside of a concentration in the City of Buffalo and relative dearth of such women in the Erie County suburbs, there's no clear pattern of residential distribution.
- Poverty status is perhaps the most important indicator of health care need. In the region, 15% of the population lives below federal poverty level compared to 10% for the State. People at 200 percent of the Federal poverty level are overwhelmingly concentrated in the cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls and widely across the Southern Tier counties of Chautauqua, Cattaraugus and Allegany in both small cities and rural areas. These areas also have excessively high rates Children under 18 living in poverty (30% in Chautauqua County). In June 2014 the US Census Bureau ranked the City of Buffalo as the 4th poorest city in the nation, where nearly 27 percent of the population lives in poverty, nearly two thirds under 200% of the federal poverty level.
- The median household income in WNY is $49,304, 15% below the New York State median of $58,003. Erie County is 13% below the State median, however the City of Buffalo is 47% below NYS median. Niagara County is 17% below the State median, however the City of Niagara Falls is 44% below NYS median. Most rural counties are 27% below the State median and some small cities in rural areas are 46% below the state median.

- Educational attainment is an underlying factor for poverty status and, by extension, health care need. Lowest rates of high school completion are concentrated in Buffalo and Niagara Falls and across the Southern Tier Counties. Orleans County also has some lower rates for persons with high school diplomas.
- Foreign born people may have greater health care needs as a result of dislocation from their places of origin. However, circumstances can vary widely. Immigrant and refugee populations in Buffalo and Lackawanna or migrant farm labor populations in Orleans County likely have higher needs. Foreign born people in Amherst are likely to be students or faculty at the University at Buffalo or work in industries where benefits include health insurance.
- Households without access to a vehicle provides a crucial indicator of the ability of people to obtain access to health care services. Where a vehicle is absent and given the poor state of public transit across the region, getting to appointments and filling prescriptions are onerous, sometimes impossible, tasks. As with many other indicators, concentrations of households with no vehicle are in the cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls and along the Southern Tier. The region ranks last among upstate regions for households without access to a vehicle.
- In Western New York the population with disability is 103,347 or 11% of the total. This is almost double the State percentage. The disability percentage is high in every county and ranges from a low of 9% in Genesee County to a high of 14% in Orleans County.
- The unemployed civilian population over 16 is 5%, which is low compared to 9% at the state level. The population over 16 not in the labor force is comparable to the state (37%). The employed population with a disability is three times the state rate (3% vs 1%).

Age Profile:

The Western New York region has an age profile that is slightly older than New York State. The age group 65 and above is 15.8% of the total population compared to the State’s 13.6%. Niagara and Chautauqua are 16%+ for this age group. There are portions of the City of Buffalo and Lackawanna that are younger where larger number of younger refugees and immigrant families have settled over the last decade. Otherwise, there are no significant age differences across the region.

- Institutionalized Population- The region as a whole has 25,155 people living in institutional settings that are nor correctional or SNF. Most are in Erie County where a large Psychiatric Center is located.
- Correctional Facilities- Region wide there are 13,592 adults in jails, most in Erie, Wyoming, Orleans, and Chautauqua Counties where prisons are located. There are Juvenile Facilities housing 552 people, most in Erie County.
- SNF Facilities- Total region is 10,562, mostly in the urban counties (Erie, Niagara, and Chautauqua).

- The current PPR Potentially Avoidable Readmissions rate is 5.8/100. A 25% reduction would amount to 511 less readmissions or a goal rate of 4.4/100. Niagara, Orleans, and Chautauqua Counties are currently nearly double the goal rate (as high as 8.9).
- The current PQI #90 Overall Composite rate is 1,651.2/100,000. A 25% reduction would amount to 932 less admissions or a goal rate of 1,238.4. Wyoming, Niagara, and Orleans, Counties currently 80% above the goal rate (as high as 2,289/100,000).
- The current PQI #91 Acute Composite rate is 467.0/100,000. A 25% reduction would amount to 282 less admissions or a goal rate of 350.2/100,000. Wyoming, Niagara, and Cattaraugus Counties are nearly double the goal rate (as high as 720.5/100,000).
- The current PQI #92 Chronic Composite rate is 1,186.7/100,000. A 25% reduction would be 650 less admissions or a goal rate of 890.0/100,000. Orleans County is nearly double that rate at 1,702.4/100,000.
- The current PPV ED Preventable Visits rate is 37.6/100. A 25% reduction would be 35,053 ED visits or a goal rate of 28.2/100. The south region (Allegany, Cattaraugus, and Chautauqua Counties) is currently the most above goal (as high as 52.6/100).

Table V(B)v – Chronic Disease Prevalence Estimates for General Population

- Compared to the State, the region and all counties have higher prevalence for CVD related diseases: High Blood Pressure (32.7% vs 26.8%), Cardiovascular (9.1% vs 7.7%, and Coronary Heart (7.6% vs 6.3). Some counties have higher prevalence than the State for diabetes. The region was below the State prevalence for Asthma. As is the case for many other indicators, Niagara County is above the State prevalence for all these conditions. These estimates were compiled from the NYSDOH Expanded BRFSS Report 2009.

V(C) – Additional Findings not previously addressed

V(C)i - Additional Findings – Primary Care Utilization

WNY has a 28 % lower PCP visit rate and a lower proportion of beneficiaries (60 %) with a PCP visit compared to NY State (64 %). Low primary care utilization is a greater problem in the smaller rural areas with rates as low as 54%. This suggests that Medicaid patients in the region rely on the ED for care instead of using primary care. One of the many challenges that would need to be addressed is to ensure beneficiaries have access to PCPs which are conveniently located with extended hours.

V(C)ii - Additional Findings – Uninsured & Medicaid Non Utilizers

The uninsured rates in WNY are lower (7.5%) compared to New York State (11%). The rural counties have the highest uninsured rates. Cattaraugus County has the highest proportion of uninsured in WNY (11.8%), slightly higher than the state average. Erie County has the lowest proportion of uninsured (6.5%) in WNY.

The Medicaid non-utilization of outpatient (OP), inpatient (IP), and Emergency Department (ED) services was calculated by dividing the number of unique Medicaid beneficiaries in the SPARCS discharge data by the total number of beneficiaries in the county.

While WNY Medicaid patients are slightly less likely to be non utilizers of OP, IP, and ED facilities than the state in general, despite their poor health they are less likely to see a PCP (35% compared to NYS 31%). Orleans County is the only county where the PCP visit matches the State's, all other counties in WNY have lower PCP utilization, with Genesee having the lowest (40% no PCP). The low rate of PCP utilization in the area must be addressed to ensure that Medicaid beneficiaries have the proper access to care to prevent avoidable hospitalizations and ED visits.

V(C)iii - Additional Findings – Behavioral Health

Western New York’s admission rate for depression is high (45.5/ beneficiary with depression), exceeding the NY State rate (40.6). Niagara County’s rate is extremely high (67.0), exceeding NY’s by 65 percent. Admission rates were determined as the number of inpatient admissions per beneficiary with Depression.

The next table presents information on readmissions for patients with mental health conditions, as defined by Major Diagnostic Category. The table includes the proportion of patients with multiple admissions and the average number of readmissions per patient. It indicates that readmissions due to mental health issues are a problem in WNY (28% with multiple admissions), as it had a slightly higher proportion of patients with multiple admissions compared to NY State (27%), and the admissions/patient were higher for WNY. Again, we see that Niagara County fares much worse (32%) than the rest of WNY and NY State as a whole.

Finally, Western New York has a severe shortage of psychiatrists and psychologists compared to NY State. The table contains the number of psychiatrists and psychologists per 10,000 beneficiaries. On average, NY State has almost twice as many psychiatrists and psychologists per beneficiary compared to WNY. Orleans County has no Psychiatrists and most other small rural counties have no Pediatric Psychiatrists. This is indicative of a critical shortage of access to care for Mental Health issues in the area.

V(C)iv - Additional Findings – Maternal & Child Health

Teenage Pregnancy- For the state, 94.3% of mothers are at least twenty years old. For the region, that number is only 91.8%. The region has a higher percentage of births at every age level under 20. Particularly high are teenage pregnancy rates in rural counties, especially in the South region, though every county is above the state average. This table is based on the mother’s age at delivery.

Premature Birth inpatient lengths of stay (LOS) - Babies born before the full term require increased medical attention both early on and throughout their lives. They are susceptible to a range of health problems relating to their under-developed organs. The following table compares the average inpatient lengths of stay (LOS) for pre-mature vs. normal births and presents the ratio of premature/ normal LOS for WNY. WNY overall has a higher ratio, indicating an average LOS that is longer for pre-mature births, compared to NY State.

Distressingly, the table shows that premature newborns are in the hospital 7-8 times as long as normal newborns, and during their stays they require much more medical attention than do the full-term newborns, so the costs to Medicaid would be even higher (than 7-8 times). Any effort to decrease the proportion of premature newborns would substantially benefit the newborns, their parents, and the healthcare system.

V(C)v - Additional Findings – SNF Hospitalization Rates

The adjacent table was generated using SPARCS inpatient data, and patients were flagged as SNF patients if they were admitted from or discharged to an SNF. Beneficiaries receiving SNF care are dual eligible, and so tend to use more healthcare resources. Though half of the eight WNY counties have admission rates higher than NY State, WNY (14.81/1,000 SNF beneficiaries) at large has fewer SNF admissions/beneficiary than the State (16.05).

The highest utilization rates in WNY are in Genesee and Wyoming Counties, which are about 64 and 35 percent greater than the state average of respectively. The lowest is Chautauqua County with a visit rate 38 percent lower than the state average.

The percentage of beneficiaries who visit SNFs is slightly higher in WNY than the state. Again, the counties with the greatest proportions of SNF users are Genesee and Wyoming, while the lowest is in Chautauqua.

V(C)vi - Additional Findings – Transportation & Access to Care

Vehicle Ownership - The adjacent table shows the proportion of the population who don't have a vehicle. In an area such as Western New York that lacks a robust public transportation system, vehicle ownership is fundamental for adequate access to care. Overall, in WNY, 12% of households do not own a vehicle. Erie County has the highest rate (14% no vehicle), followed by Niagara, Cattaraugus, and Chautauqua Counties.

Proximity to Providers – The map below shows how near populations are to acute care hospitals. Acute care hospitals in Western New York are concentrated around population centers. Of the 22 acute care hospitals in the region, more than half are located in the region’s two metropolitan counties -- Erie and Niagara. This concentration leads to higher proximity scores for zip codes in the cities of Buffalo, Niagara Falls and their adjacent suburbs where the concentrations of Medicaid enrollees are lower.

In the region’s more rural counties, cities like Jamestown, Olean and Batavia also have hospitals and generate relatively high proximity scores. However, the dispersed populations just beyond these centers are relatively underserved by hospitals. This is most apparent in the northern swath of Allegany County and the southern edge of Wyoming County, which includes the highest intensity of the relatively low proximity scores across the region.

In sum, the map corroborates the commonly-held assumption that populations in rural areas distance from care is much greater than their urban counterparts. Unlike all subsequent proximity assessments, this measure is based solely on distance and does not factor in for the number of people in each ZIP code.

Many patients, Medicaid and non-Medicaid, have trouble accessing the health system due to a number of issues—they live far from providers (both hospitals and physicians) or they have limited mobility. To ensure that these patients have the highest level of access, it is sometimes necessary and prudent to bring health services to them. One method of doing so is telemedicine. As technologies advance, utilization of them can increase access to care and care itself should be a prime objective of the health system. Telemedicine is also suited for chronic disease management, psychiatry, and primary care monitoring.

V(C)vii - Additional Findings – Greater Buffalo United Ministries Needs Assessment

The Greater Buffalo United Ministries (GRUM), an association of 61 churches located in or near all of the black and Latino neighborhoods in Greater Buffalo. To better understand community residents views on the inner city areas of the Erie County health care system, structured questionnaires were completed by members of the GRUM churches and neighborhood residents, and focus groups were held with 229 residents. They conducted eleven public meetings over a four week period during August and September 2014.

Respondents reported that Black and Latino neighborhoods are food swamps and deserts where food security is a major health issue. With few grocery stores located in the inner city, residents are often forced to shop at discount stores and convenience stores, where healthy food doesn’t exist and purchasing unhealthy is food is their only option. These neighborhoods are also service deserts where few fitness, recreational and supportive services are available and city service delivery is inadequate.

Health literacy is an issue reported by many participants. There was the perception that people understand health issues when they do not. This problem is most dramatically revealed in the discussion over hypertension. When asked to rate their knowledge of chronic diseases, the respondents rated their understanding of hypertension or high blood pressure the highest, while rating the understanding of kidney disease near the bottom. However, the problem is people do not understand that the poorly managed treatment of high blood pressure will lead to kidney disease. Respondents also demonstrated limited “practical” knowledge about the requirements and benefits of nutrition and exercise.

VI. Healthcare Provider & Community Resources Gaps Identified

VI(A) Health and behavioral health service gaps and/or excess capacity

Excess Hospital and SNF Bed Capacity-

In Western New York there are total of 3,455 licensed hospital (non SNF) beds. With an aggregate occupancy rate of 64% (actual bed days / bed days available) translates into 1,240 beds not in use. The reality is that not all used beds are staffed units, except for small rural hospitals with few beds and minimum staffing requirements.

The NYSDOH projected estimate of public need for residential health care facilities in WNY is that there are 499 excess beds. In the North region (Niagara and Orleans) there is 28 bed shortage, in the Central region (Erie, Genesee, and Wyoming) there are 239 excess beds, and in the South region (Allegany, Cattaraugus, and Chautauqua) there are 288 excess beds.

Gaps in Interoperability-

Enhanced communication and care management data sharing between primary care and specialists, mental health, health homes, community support agencies does not exist and the interoperability with hospitals and pharmacies needs to be enhanced.

Primary Care Gaps-

Shortages: Large portions of the inner city and rural areas of the region are designated as population Health Professional Shortage Areas (HPSAs). The City of Buffalo has a high need designation. The ratio of Medicaid population to Safety Net physicians is excessively high (over 4,500:1) in Niagara and Allegany Counties and high (over 2,250:1) in Erie, Wyoming, and Chautauqua Counties. Working with AHEC partners, it is essential to influence primary career choice and to better place physicians in safety net PCP settings.

PCMH Status: Only 21% (110) out of 512 primary care locations in the region are currently NCQA recognized as PCMH facilities. Outside of Erie and Niagara Counties the number of PCMH locations is extremely low.

Midlevel Workforce in PCP Settings: Only 22% (306) of the primary care providers in the region are midlevel providers (PA or NP). Most midlevel providers are currently working in specialty or hospital settings.

Care Management Personnel in PCP Settings: In certain segments the health care system, there are virtually no primary care personnel devoted exclusively to the care management of high risk complex population. Creating this function and workflow in primary care settings capable of interacting across all settings, is essential to reducing avoidable hospitalization and ED visits.

Behavioral Health (BH) Gaps-

No BH Primary Care Integration- With a few exceptions, there is little meaningful integration of behavioral health with primary care due in large part to the structural barriers (regulatory, confidentiality, lack of interoperability, lack of cross training, etc.) that exist between the medical and behavioral health systems. With the exception of Psychiatrists, physicians are not well trained in behavioral health and yet primary care physicians are medical providers that serve the behavioral health population (with the exception of the seriously mentally ill). Behavioral health conditions have a profound effect of the medical management of chronic complex disease.

Workforce Implications to Achieve BH PC Integration- The emerging Health Home agencies that collectively cover the WNY region, will be major infrastructure for operationalizing this integration. In addition there is a need to create new functionality with the primary care setting to provide dedicated workflow, roles, and responsibilities for this integration to happen in meaningful ways. In some PCP settings dedicated care management staff may be necessary for the integration of high risk behavioral health population. An ideal care management workers in the PCP office would be the Licensed Mental Health Counselor (not presently credentialed by Health Plans) and more Licensed Social Workers. These behavioral health trained disciplines imbedded in the PCP setting would overcome many of the professional interface barriers. In areas with concentrations of seriously mentally ill, it may be effected to embed PCP providers in the behavioral health settings in targeted locations.

Shortage of Psychiatrists and Psychologists - Western New York has a severe shortage of psychiatrists and psychologists compared to NY State. On average, NY State has almost twice as many psychiatrists and psychologists per beneficiary compared to WNY. Orleans County has no Psychiatrists and most other small rural counties have no Pediatric Psychiatrists. This is indicative of a critical shortage of access to care for Mental Health issues in the area.

VI(B) Justification

Availability- There are significant gaps in service locations for primary care and behavioral health clinicians as evidenced by large areas designated as Health Professional Shortage Areas and by geographic gap analysis.

Accessibility- In the “Community Conversation” Focus Groups, a key finding was that waiting to be seen is a barrier to patient engagement in the primary care system. This includes how far in the future an appointment may be as well as how long the patient waits once they arrive at the clinic or other site. Both contribute to problems with no-shows and inappropriate ED use.

Affordability- In the “Community Conversation” Focus Groups, a key finding was that out-of-pocket costs are a significant barrier to health care for lower-income consumers. This includes, not only the cost of co-pays, deductibles and prescription drug purchases, but also transportation to sites of care and costs associated with being away from home (baby-sitters) or work (lost pay).

Quality- In the Community Needs Assessment Survey, when asked to select from a list of suggested improvements to the primary care delivery system, one of the most common answer was “better follow-up care,” and “more responsive staff.” In the “Community Conversation” Focus Groups a key finding was that communication is a problem for Medicaid patients who may not fully understand a doctor’s instructions or explanations, either because the doctor speaks too technically or because the patient speaks another language, or because the doctor “talks down” to the patient. More generally, provider sensitivity to cultural differences is seen as a need. Many of the Domain 2 and 3 metrics indicate lack of performance system wide in terms of prevention quality indicators. Many Focus Group participants also felt that the quality of care provided to Medicaid enrollees is perceived by some as inferior in quality to the care that people receive when they are otherwise insured.

Hours of Operation- In the Community Needs Assessment Survey, when asked to select from a list of suggested improvements to the primary care delivery system, the most common answer was “shorter time to schedule appointments,” followed by “longer hours of operation.”

Transportation- In the “Community Conversation” Focus Groups, a key finding was that transportation is a pervasive problem in ensuring access to health care for the poor and nearly poor. Many low-income households lack access to a vehicle, public transit services in the region are weak or non-existent, and use of Medicaid funded services requires significant advance notice for pick-up and drop off. These challenges contribute to problems with no-shows to primary care appointments. A proximity to providers analysis indicates that many patients, Medicaid and non-Medicaid, have trouble accessing the health system due to a number of issues—they live far from providers (both hospitals and physicians) or they have limited mobility.

VI(C) Strategy to address gaps to meet community needs.

Excess Hospital and SNF Bed Capacity- We will work collaborative to decertify unused, unstaffed beds in hospitals and residential health care facilities, while seeking beneficial ways of repurposing the unused space for non inpatient services by the facility or by tenants.

Gaps in Interoperability- To meet DSRIP goals, there are various critical functions that require interoperability, especially during transitions of care. The current system in WNY lacks the interoperability required to support patients across these transitions and to prevent avoidable hospital care. Interoperability enhancements will be focused on six areas of functionality:

- (1) Coordination of care especially for high risk patients across the community.
- (2) Emergency care: Critical clinical information from across the system is required for effective emergency care:
 - (a) Arrival at ED: Clinical information needed to inform emergency decision-making - This can prevent errors and reduce avoidable hospitalizations;
 - (b) Release from ED: Clinical information must be communicated to PCP/other providers about emergency care delivered. This info is used to prevent recurrent use of emergency services, including ED, and avoidable hospitalization.

- (3) Hospital care: (a) Admission: Sharing info at the point of hospital admission and during hospitalization to inform good clinical decision-making. This can prevent avoidable admission and prevent recurrent hospitalization by ensuring proper care in the first place; (b) Discharge: Sharing information at the point of hospital discharge – including med changes, ADEs, follow-up plan, pending tests, changes in code status, risk status, self-management support needs, etc. This can prevent readmissions.
- (4) Referral to Subspecialists: Need to convey relevant clinical information to inform good coordinated decision-making – in both directions.
- (5) Medication safety - especially during the above transitions: Need clinical information from all sources about medication changes, indication for meds, allergies, ADRs, compliance, risks / barriers identified.
- (6) Interoperability with Behavioral Health and Community Supports: Need to convey relevant risk factor information to inform good coordinated care management – in both directions.

Examples of clinical data that needs to be shared to meet the above needs includes: laboratory, radiology results, transcribed reports, active problems, past medical history, medication history, allergies, adverse drug reactions, psychosocial factors, risk status, PCP contact person, Health Home contact (if applicable) and notification of admission or discharge from inpatient, post-acute, and emergency care.

Primary Care Gaps-

Practice Transformation to PCMH 2014 Level 3- Each PPS will use various types of Practice Facilitators using the evidence-based TRANSLATE model to facilitate the PCMH recognition process. The T is for target; which stands for clear, measurable, evidence-based, and feasible goals. The R is for reminder systems that produce actionable information at the point of care. The A stands for administrative buy-in to allow for adequate resource allocation in terms of both personnel and money. The N is for networked information systems that allow for registry creation and population health management. The S stands for site coordinator who is responsible for local accountability and being a single point of contact to make sure the project is completed. The L is for the local physician champion. The A is for audit and feedback so that there is data to drive the quality improvement (QI) process. Primary Care Shortages: Working with AHEC partners, it is essential to influence primary career choice and to better place physicians and midlevel providers in safety net PCP settings.

Behavioral Health (BH) Gaps-

Behavioral Health - Primary Care Integration- (a) Working collaboratively across PPSs, we will explore mechanisms for meaningful integration of behavioral health with primary care by overcoming structural barriers (regulatory, confidentiality, lack of interoperability, lack of cross training, etc.) that exist between the medical and behavioral health systems. (b) Primary care providers will be offered evidenced based training in behavioral health related topics such as: SBIRT (Screening, Brief Intervention, Referral and Treatment) and in the use of the Patient Health Questionnaire (PHQ-9) to manage depression. (c) Various strategies will be used in targeted behavioral health settings to either co-locate primary care services or to train behavioral health providers in supporting patient self-management related to lifestyle change, reduction of risk behavior, and medication compliance. (d) Accelerating the integration of the emerging Health Home agencies into the infrastructure for operationalizing this integration. (e) In addition there is a need to create new functionality with the primary care safety net settings to provide dedicated workflow, roles, and responsibilities for the behavioral health integration to happen in meaningful ways. In some PCP safety net settings, dedicated care management staff may be necessary for the integration of high risk behavioral health population. Ideal behavioral health care management workers in the PCP office would be the Licensed Mental Health Counselor (not presently credentialed by Health Plans) and more Licensed Social Workers. These behavioral health trained disciplines imbedded in the PCP setting would overcome many of the professional interface barriers.

Shortage of Psychiatrists and Psychologists - Working with AHEC partners, it is essential to recruit and better place psychiatrists and psychologists graduating from NYS residency programs into the shortage areas.

VII. Stakeholder & Community Engagement

VII(A) Explanation of the stakeholder and community engagement process

The assessment process was launched as an outreach to the people of the communities served and key informant providers in the Western New York health care system. A three part process was designed to ensure that the needs assessment understood clearly the voice of the consumer. These elements included a robust community survey, facilitated conversations with community groups and an ambitious series of interviews with providers across the region.

VII(B) Description of the number and types of Community Engagement conducted

Three community engagement approaches were used to gather extensive qualitative data that provided dimension and human context to the numbers, providing us with the means to explain some of the dynamics at play in our health care system today:

1. Community Health Needs Survey- completed by more than 7,000 people
2. Focus Groups- 16 “community conversations” engaging people served by the system to better understand those patient perspectives.
3. Key Informant Provider Interviews- a series of 42 interviews with providers from every part of the region and every phase of the health care system from primary care to mental health and behavioral care to emergency department settings.

Community Health Needs Survey

A broad-based community survey designed to hear the voice of the customer in health care and to provide a source of data to complement the systematically collected health care and health status data analyzed for this assessment. The survey was adapted from the Behavioral Risk Factor Surveillance System survey, which seeks information from consumers on their health care experiences and health status as well as basic demographic information. Two open-ended questions: one asking what the respondent believes is the most important health problem in the community, another asking what they believe is the most critical health system need – were included.

The survey was deployed in two ways. A hard-copy version of the survey was distributed in health care settings across the eight- county region with the assistance of partner organizations to the Performing Provider Systems. These included hospitals, emergency departments, urgent care clinics, primary care clinics, mental and behavioral health clinics, and other sites. More than 5,000 of such surveys were returned, tabulated and analyzed. In addition, an on-line version of the survey was distributed, also through PPS partners as well as insurers such as Independent Health and Blue Cross/ Blue Shield, and via social media sites and word of mouth. Nearly 1,900 surveys were completed on-line.

Obviously, the more than 7,000 responses do not constitute a scientific random sample of health care consumers in the region. In the aggregate, however, the responses track roughly with the age demographics of the region, population of constituent counties, and the ratio of Medicaid to non-Medicaid insured individuals. Over-represented in the survey are health care employees, mental health patients, residents of Erie County versus residents of the other seven counties. The results provide some interesting insights into health and health care in the region.

Focus Groups (Community Conversations)

Outreach to hear the voice of the customer also included a series of 16 “community conversations” with Medicaid enrollees and others. These small group discussions – involving up to a few dozen participants in each – provided an open-ended opportunity for residents to reflect on their experiences in the health care system and suggest some improvements. The sessions were facilitated by the P2 Collaborative of Western New York and produced in collaboration with provider organizations and community groups across the eight counties.

Key Informant Provider Interviews

Interviews included a wide range of front-line health care providers to gain valuable insights into the dynamics of health care provision on the ground in Western New York. The panel included hospital administrators, emergency department staff, urgent care providers, primary care doctors in a range of settings, mental health providers, discharge planners, care managers, wellness educators, plus providers who focus on maternal and infant care, childhood asthma, tobacco cessation, addiction treatment and more.

All told, 45 people were interviewed. All interview subjects were suggested by representatives of the Performing Provider Systems. Nearly all of the interviews were conducted in person. Some were one-on-one conversations. Others involved two or three individuals from the same organization. In one case a small focus group of six mental health providers was held. All followed a generally unstructured format seeking, in each case, what the interview subject had to contribute to the research behind the assessment. The interviews were not recorded but hand-written notes were transcribed as text files.

VII(C) Key findings identified through the stakeholder and community engagement process

Community Survey Key Findings:

The survey provided some striking comparisons between those who have employer provided insurance and those insured through Medicaid. Those with employer insurance were far more likely to be married and employed than Medicaid members. Those insured by Medicaid were three times more likely to report ill health in the past month and more than three times more likely to be smokers. Roughly half of respondents in each group, however, reported being overweight or obese.

When asked to select from a list of suggested improvements to the primary care delivery system, the most common answer was "shorter time to schedule appointments," followed by "longer hours of operation," "better follow-up care," and "more responsive staff." In the open-ended questions, respondents identified the most important health problems in their community (in descending order of frequency) as obesity, diabetes, mental health issues, cancer, smoking and heart disease. The most important health care needs cited included mental health care, more affordable insurance, primary and preventive care, health education, the need for more doctors, better access in general, and transportation.

A more detailed description of the survey and detailed results are presented in the CNA VOLUME TWO starting on page 9.

Community Conversations Key Findings

- Out-of-pocket costs are a significant barrier to health care for lower-income consumers. This includes, not only the cost of co-pays, deductibles and prescription drug purchases, but also transportation to sites of care and costs associated with being away from home (baby-sitters) or work (lost pay).
- Transportation is a pervasive problem in ensuring access to health care for the poor and nearly poor. Many low-income households lack access to a vehicle, public transit services in the region are weak or non-existent, and use of Medicaid funded services requires significant advance notice for pick-up and drop off. These challenges contribute to problems with no-shows to primary care appointments.
- The quality of care provided to Medicaid enrollees is perceived by some as inferior in quality to the care that people receive when they are otherwise insured.
- Communication is a problem for Medicaid patients who may not fully understand a doctor's instructions or explanations, either because the doctor speaks too technically or because the patient speaks another language, or because the doctor "talks down" to the patient. More generally, provider sensitivity to cultural differences is seen as a need.
- Waiting to be seen is felt as a barrier to patient engagement in the primary care system. This includes how far in the future an appointment may be as well as how long the patient waits once she arrives at the clinic or other site. Both contribute to problems with no-shows and inappropriate ED use.
- Continuity of care is important to patients. In areas with high turnover among providers, patients can be left feeling abandoned or forced to describe their situation over and over again to someone new. Patients value their relationship with primary care provider or mental health counselor. More generally, patients sometimes feel passed around from one provider to another.
- Mental health care is an area of particular shortage, at least as perceived by patients. Long waits to find a provider, either because insurers must approve or evaluations must be completed, discourage patients.
- Integration of hospice and expansion of palliative care shared decision making in more settings.

A more detailed description of the community conversation focus groups and detailed results are presented in the CNA VOLUME TWO starting on page 37.

Provider Interview Key Findings

- Poverty is the overriding and most pervasive issue driving health care need in our region. Of course, Medicaid beneficiaries are poor by definition. But the impact of poverty on the income, employment status, educational attainment, regional mobility and the overall "opportunity structure" of individuals is massive. It influences all the choices individuals make about what to eat, whether to smoke, if they see a doctor, showing up for appointments, complying with regimes of medication, following doctors' orders, and much more.
- Chronic diseases are a pervasive issue for providers, especially, and perhaps ironically, for those working in emergency settings. Diabetes, asthma, cardiac disease, pulmonary conditions, addiction and other chronic conditions are both prevalent in the population and evident in emergency departments. Of course, these have an impact throughout the health care system – for primary care providers, skilled nursing facilities, discharge planners and care coordinators.
- Lifestyle issues are also understood as a driver of health care need. Rates of tobacco use, especially among Medicaid enrollees, poor diet, lack of exercise, and dangerous behaviors lead variously to obesity, diabetes, cardiac disease, cancer, lung problems, as well as HIV and sexually transmitted diseases and unwanted and teenage pregnancy.
- Access to care is a huge, complicated and difficult issue for providers. Patients who fail to appear for scheduled appointments make it hard to maximize the benefit from scarce resources. Patients who use emergency departments instead waste even more resources. And many patients will come when they are sick but not for well visits and preventive care. But patients face a discouraging set of challenges: getting to provider sites when they don't own a car, waiting days or weeks to get an appointment, waiting hours to be seen, missing work to go to the doctor, not being able to afford co-pays or prescriptions and more.

- Compliance with prescription drugs and other doctor's orders was another important theme in the conversations. Research in the region has revealed a huge gap between what providers write in the clinic and what patients take at home. Cost is a barrier to compliance but so is confusion on the part of patients. Other ongoing research is examining where prescriber behavior departs from accepted practice – with impacts on both cost and health outcomes.
- Capacity is a key issue across primary care, specialist care and mental and behavioral health care. There's not a great financial incentive to train to be a primary care provider and significant disincentives in terms of working conditions, especially in rural areas. A broad range of specialists are also in short supply in rural quarters. The number of mental and behavioral health providers also seems inadequate to meet the need.
- Better coordination of care is identified as a pressing need across the system, in general, and specifically to address the DSRIP specific issues of unnecessary ED visits, avoidable in-patient utilization, and preventable re-admissions. The good news is that work is already under way to build better systems of coordination, through programs like the hospital-based health homes, the Patient Centered Medical Home, and Accountable Care Organizations, as well as through the individual initiative of primary care practitioners and others.
- Medicaid reimbursement structures provide some incentives that run contrary to the goals of the DSRIP program. Patients suffer no penalty for missing a medical appointment or for calling an ambulance to get to the emergency room for non-acute care. Hospitals are penalized financially for reducing ED visits. Low reimbursement levels prevent the development of urgent care facilities in locations where Medicaid patients might make most use of them. The rates also constrict supply of services by private primary care doctors even as funding for Federally Qualified Health Centers increases it.

VIII(B) Summary of CNA Findings

CNA #	CNA Title	Brief Description	Supporting Data
CNA 1	Need for delivery system integration across the spectrum of care	Excess bed capacity. Lack of interoperable HIE between health care settings. Primary care gaps. Lack of Behavioral health integration with primary care. Behavioral health gaps. Care management inadequate across settings (Hospital/ED to PCP, to BH, to community supports)	1,240 Inpatient Beds not in use region wide. 499 excess SNF beds. More than 40% community level consent with RHIO. Large portions of inner city and rural areas are Primary Care HPSAs. Only 21% of the 512 primary care locations are NCQA PCMH recognized. Structural barriers between medical system and behavioral health system. WNY have half the number of psychiatrists and psychologists per beneficiary as does the state. Care management crossing settings not functional.
CNA 2	Need for accessible primary care as an alternative to emergency department	Emergency Department is currently the preferred source of care for the uninsured and the Medicaid beneficiaries without access to primary care.	35,053 PPV preventable ED visits per year; current rate is 37.6/100; goal rate for 25% reduction would be 28.2/100. Most EDs have no triage function for dealing with non-emergent care needs. Most have little follow-up with PCP to prevent repeat ED visits.
CNA 3	High Readmission rates due to poor transitions between settings	Currently many patients with chronic conditions are readmitted within 30 days because there was no support to assist their transition to community, to home, to their primary or to hospice.	2,042 PPR potentially avoidable readmissions per year; current rate is 5.8/100; goal rate for 25% reduction would be 4.4/100. Lack of care coordination during transitions, low health literacy, language issues, and lack of engagement with the community health care system have been identified as important factors.
CNA 4	High hospital transfer rates from SNF	Many SNF patients are transferred to hospitals for conditions that could have been identified early and preempted before emerging to acute problems.	Over half of the counties in WNY have SNF to hospital admission rates higher than the state's 14.81/1,000 SNF beneficiaries.
CNA 5	High Readmission rates due to poor collaboration with home care & PCMH	Currently many patients with chronic conditions are readmitted within 30 days because home care was not evaluated & arranged under supervision of the PCP.	2,042 PPR potentially avoidable readmissions per year; current rate is 5.8/100; goal rate for 25% reduction would be 4.4/100. Lack of care coordination during transitions, low health literacy, language issues, and lack of engagement with the community health care system have been identified as important factors. Transition supports such as home care services not well deployed.

CNA #	CNA Title	Brief Description	Supporting Data
CNA 6	High avoidable chronic disease admissions in underserved areas low access areas	Many complex patients in underserved areas often do not go to a PCP in their county and do not have nearby access to specialist.	Region lacks a robust public transportation system, vehicle ownership is fundamental for adequate access to care. Overall, in WNY, 12% of households do not own a vehicle. Remote patient care supports such as telemedicine is not well deployed. Some specialist such as Psychiatrists are missing in rural areas and the state has twice as many per beneficiary as are in WNY.
CNA 7	Need for patient activation & engagement to integrate uninsured & non-utilizers into community care	Currently, the only contact the uninsured have with the health system is through the ED. Engaging this population and connecting them to community care can improve health and reduce inappropriate ED use.	The rural counties have high uninsured rates. Cattaraugus County has the highest proportion of uninsured in WNY (11.8%), slightly higher than the state average. While WNY Medicaid patients are slightly less likely to be non utilizers of OP, IP, and ED facilities than the state in general, despite their poor health they are less likely to see a PCP (35% compared to NYS 31%). Little integrated functionality in crisis intervention community settings geared to activate and connect the UI and NU population to the health care delivery system.
CNA 8	Need for greater integration of primary care and behavioral health services	Currently primary care settings have few providers trained in BH and their integration with BH is fragmented. Patients with BH needs often view care as inaccessible, stigmatizing, and often feel marginalized by the health care system.	Structural barriers between medical system and behavioral health systems hamper integration. WNY have half the number of psychiatrists and psychologists per beneficiary as does the state. Care management crossing settings is not functional. Health Homes just started, and are not yet a meaningful part of the integrated infrastructure with primary care, especially in rural counties.
CNA 9	Need for behavioral health community crisis stabilization services	Currently many patients with BH problems end up in acute care for extended periods of time because they lack support and assistance in the community at times of crisis.	Limited integration in crisis intervention community settings that is geared to activate and connect the uninsured and non-utilizing high need population to the health care delivery system. Most crisis services have limited coordination across the region and there is virtually no interoperability with the RHIO.
CNA 10	High cardiovascular disease prevalence & leading cause of death	Currently many patients with cardiovascular conditions or risks do not consistently receive evidenced base care in primary care settings.	CVD/ heart related conditions are the (a) leading cause of death, (b) leading cause of premature death, (c) leading cause of hospitalization, (d) and leading cause of preventable hospitalization for the general population and more so for African Americans.

CNA #	CNA Title	Brief Description	Supporting Data
CNA 11	Poor Perinatal indicators for low income population	Many women on Medicaid and their children do not consistently receive adequate prenatal or well child care. The 69.5% of children who have had the recommended number of well child visits in government sponsored programs is below the State goal of 76.9%. Medicaid Well Care Visits in 1st 15 months are done 87.4% of the time. Medicaid Low Weight Births (<2,500 grams) happens 9.6% of the time. Inadequate Prenatal Care for Medicaid women occurs 22.2% of the time. High Risk Pregnancies occur for Medicaid mothers 10.9% of the time. The % of unintended pregnancy among live births is 33.2%, well above the Prevention Agenda goal of 23.8%.
CNA 12	Palliative care shared decision making not occurring when most appropriate	Often times patients and families have not been engaged in palliative care options prior to reaching end stage ICU care that is not informed by quality of life wishes.	"Community Conversations" Focus Groups key findings called for integration of hospice and expansion of palliative care shared decision making in more settings.
CNA 13	Mental, emotional, & behavioral well-being not addressed for the general population	Promotion of community well-being is fragmented at the local level and is not orchestrated at the regional level.	% of adults with poor mental health in the general population is 11.7%, above the NYS Prevention Agenda goal of 10.1%. % of adult binge drinking in the general population is 18.9%, above Prevention Agenda goal of 18.4%. Suicide death rate in the general population is 11.4/100,000, far above the Prevention Agenda goal 5.9/100,000.
CNA 14	Tobacco use tied to leading causes of premature death and preventable hospitalizations	Currently patients who use tobacco are not consistently presented with offers of cessation assistance in primary care settings.	The % of cigarette smoking among adults is 20.8%, above the NYS Prevention Agenda goal of 15%. Smoking related conditions are top five causes of death and premature death in every county (heart followed by lung). The same is true for African Americans.

Western New York's Medicaid population is concentrated in the region's two largest cities, Buffalo and Niagara Falls. In parts of both municipalities the proportion of residents who are enrolled in the Medicaid program exceeds fifty percent. Other areas where the proportion of Medicaid participation is high include Lackawanna, Dunkirk, Jamestown, and ZIP codes in Orleans, Cattaraugus and Allegany County. This data maps the pattern of both urban and rural poverty across Western New York and highlights where health care need is also concentrated. It also shows the broad swath of relative affluence that characterizes much of suburban and exurban Erie, Wyoming and Genesee counties.

Medicaid Population Density By ZIP Code

When the Medicaid population is viewed, not as a proportion of residents in any given ZIP code, but as a total number, the focus of the picture shifts to the metropolitan core and its suburbs.

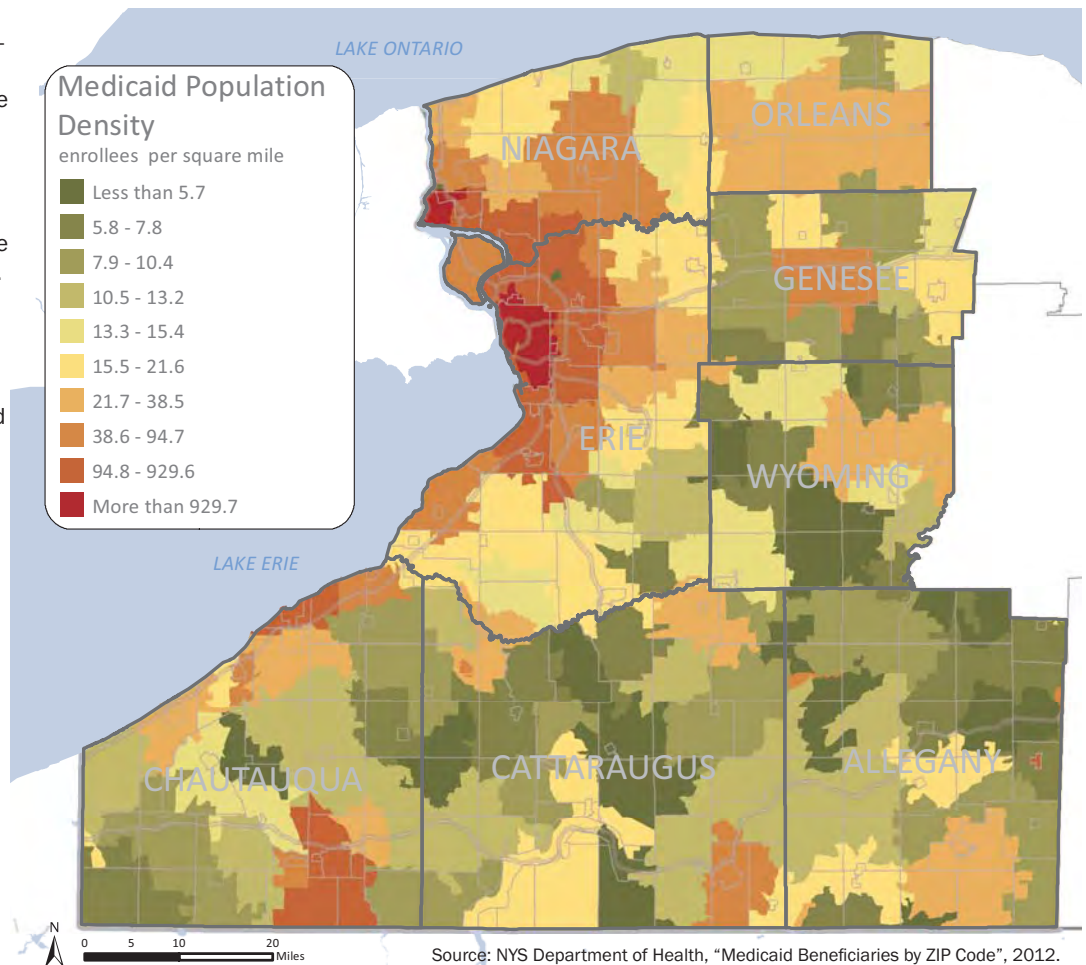

As in the map above, concentrations of Medicaid enrollees can be seen in Buffalo and Niagara Falls. But significant numbers of Medicaid members are also living in the first-ring Buffalo suburbs, the Tonawandas, Lockport, Dunkirk, Jamestown and elsewhere around the periphery of the region.

Conversely, in many areas where the proportion of Medicaid enrollees is high, the density of members is low because the overall population density is so low.

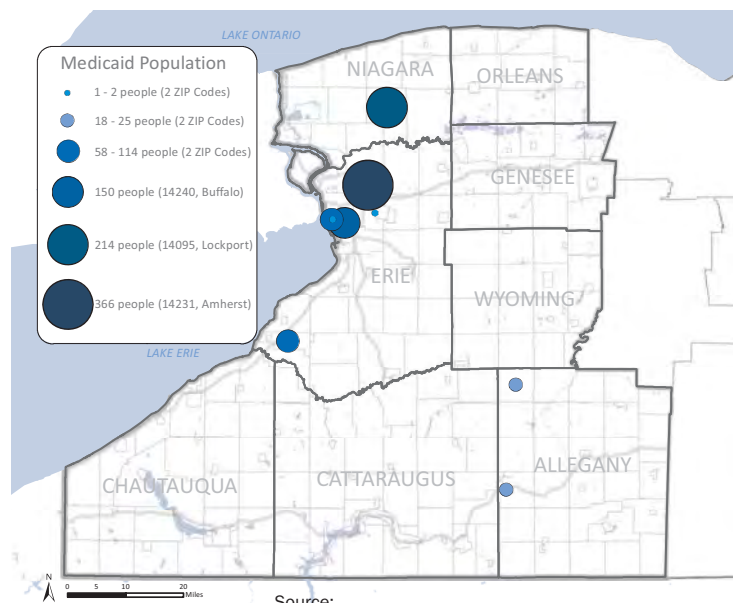

Meanwhile, it is worthy of note that nearly a thousand Medicaid members are not accounted for on a map of ZIP code geographies. They receive their mail at Post Office box-only ZIP codes so they don't show up on the map to the upper right.

There are 15 PO Box-only ZIP codes in Western New York. Most of these only have a handful of Medicaid recipients who get their mail at those post offices. There are, however, five PO Box-only ZIP codes with a significant number of Medicaid enrollees.

The largest, with 366 enrollees, is located at a post office in Amherst. Two are located in Buffalo. One is in Lockport. A fifth is in Brant. While the numbers are not miniscule, they do not have a noticeable impact on the analysis provided in this report. The Medicaid members represented presumably live in other ZIP codes in those jurisdictions. But their numbers are generally not large enough to affect the observations made throughout this assessment.

Executive Summary

Introduction

Health care providers and their partners are undertaking what all involved hope will be historic change and improvement in the system of care for enrollees in the Medicaid program. The straightforward goals of the initiative are a matter of broad consensus: improve the quality of care, reduce costs and improve the health and well-being of every beneficiary of the program.

The Delivery System Reform Incentive Payment program (DSRIP), otherwise known as “Medicaid Reform,” is the vehicle by which providers and their partners will lead the transformation of our system. This will seek to cut roughly $16 billion in unnecessary health care services and set aside half of those savings – about $8 billion – to fund projects to accomplish the overall goals.

Planning for those projects is being led by two “Performing Provider Systems” – Catholic Medical Partners/ Catholic Health System and Millennium Collaborative Care (comprising Erie County Medical Center, Kaleida Health, Niagara Falls Memorial Medical Center, the McGuire Group and SNAPCAP) – who will apply for state DSRIP funding for implementation. They have collaborated on the production of this community health needs assessment to inform their selection of projects and provide data, analysis and insights needed to further develop project plans.

The University at Buffalo Regional Institute, working closely with HMS Associates, the P2 Collaborative of Western New York, and FTI Consulting Center for Healthcare Economics and Policy is proud to submit this report as fulfillment of that DSRIP program requirement.

Methodology

Making a comprehensive assessment of community health needs in an area as large and diverse as the eight-county Western New York region requires the integration of a wide array of information and data types. Those used here include basic demographics, indicators of “community structure” or social determinants of health need, and detailed health care data describing system-wide performance, quality of care and population health status. Together, and produced as composite indices, these provide a powerful set of measures to understand in concrete terms who we are as a region, how health care is being delivered, and what are the results in terms of the health of people.

Qualitative data from a range of sources helps us give dimension and human detail to the numbers and provides us with the means to explain some of the dynamics at play in our health care system today. These data sources include a broad-based regional health needs survey completed by more than 7,000 people; a round of 16 “community conversations” engaging people served by the system to better understand those patient perspectives; and a series of 42 interviews with providers from every part of the region and every phase of the health care system from primary care to mental health and behavioral care to emergency department.

Community Engagement

The assessment process led with an outreach to the people of the communities served by the Western New York health care system. A three part process was designed to ensure that the needs assessment understood clearly the voice of the consumer. These elements included a robust community survey, facilitated conversations with community groups and an ambitious series of interviews with providers across the region.

Community Survey

The community health needs assessment included an ambitious and broad-based community survey in order to hear the voice of the customer in health care and to provide a source of data to complement the systematically collected health care and health status data analyzed for this assessment.

The survey was adapted from the Behavioral Risk Factor Surveillance System survey, which seeks information from consumers on their health care experiences and health status as well as basic demographic information. Two open-ended questions – one asking what the respondent believes is the most important health problem in the community, another asking what they believe is the most critical health system need – were included.

The survey was deployed in two ways. A hard-copy version of the survey was distributed in health care settings across the eight-county region with the assistance of partner organizations to the Performing Provider Systems. These included hospitals, emergency departments, urgent care clinics, primary care clinics, mental and behavioral health clinics, and other sites. More than 5,000 of such surveys were returned, tabulated and analyzed.

In addition, an on-line version of the survey was distributed, also through PPS partners as well as insurers such as Independent Health and Blue Cross/ Blue Shield, and via social media sites and word of mouth. Nearly 1,900 surveys were completed on-line.

Obviously, the more than 7,000 responses do not constitute a scientific random sample of health care consumers in the region. In the aggregate, however, the responses track roughly with the age demographics of the region, population of constituent counties, the ratio of Medicaid to non-Medicaid insured individuals. Over-represented in the survey are health care employees, mental health patients, residents of Erie County versus residents of the other seven counties. But the results provide some interesting insights into health and health care in the region.

The survey provided some striking comparisons between those who have employer provided insurance and those insured through Medicaid. Those with employer insurance were far more likely to be married and employed than Medicaid members. Those insured by Medicaid were three times more likely to report ill health in the past month and more than three times more likely to be smokers. Roughly half of respondents in each group, however, reported being overweight or obese.

When asked to select from a list of suggested improvements to the primary care delivery system, the most common answer was “shorter time to schedule appointments,” followed by “longer hours of operation,” “better follow-up care,” and “more responsive staff.”

In the open-ended questions, respondents identified the most important health problems in their community (in descending order of frequency) as obesity, diabetes, mental health issues, cancer, smoking and heart disease.

The most important health care needs cited included mental health care, more affordable insurance, primary and preventive care, health education, the need for more doctors, better access in general, and transportation

Community conversations

Outreach to hear the voice of the customer also included a series of 16 “community conversations” with Medicaid enrollees and others. These small group discussions – involving up to a few dozen participants in each – provided an open-ended opportunity for residents to reflect on their experiences in the health care system and suggest some improvements. The sessions were facilitated by the P2 Collaborative of Western New York and produced in collaboration with provider organizations and community groups across the eight counties.

A more detailed description of these conversations is provided in Section X. Some of the themes developed are highlighted here.

- Out-of-pocket costs are a significant barrier to health care for lower-income consumers. This includes, not only the cost of co-pays, deductibles and prescription drug purchases, but also transportation to sites of care and costs associated with being away from home (baby-sitters) or work (lost pay).
- Transportation is a pervasive problem in ensuring access to health care for the poor and nearly poor. Many low-income households lack access to a vehicle, public transit services in the region are weak or non-existent, and use of Medicaid funded services requires significant advance notice for pick-up and drop off. These challenges contribute to problems with no-shows to primary care appointments.
- The quality of care provided to Medicaid enrollees is perceived by some as inferior in quality to the care that people receive when they are otherwise insured.
- Communication is a problem for Medicaid patients who may not fully understand a doctor’s instructions or explanations, either because the doctor speaks too technically or because the patient speaks another language, or because the doctor “talks down” to the patient. More generally, provider sensitivity to cultural differences is seen as a need.
- Waiting to be seen is a felt as a barrier to patient engagement in the primary care system. This includes how far in the future an appointment may be as well as how long the patient waits once she arrives at the clinic or other site. Both contribute to problems with no-shows and inappropriate ED use.
- Continuity of care is important to patients. In areas with high turnover among providers, patients can be left feeling abandoned or forced to describe their situation over and over again to someone new. Patients value their relationship with primary care provider or mental health counselor. More generally, patients sometimes feel passed around from one provider to another.
- Mental health care is an area of particular shortage, at least as perceived by patients. Long waits to find a provider, either because insurers must approve or evaluations must be completed, discourage patients.

Provider interviews

Health care providers have a crucial perspective on the health needs of the people of our region. A total of 48 front-line providers were interviewed, as suggested by leadership of the Performing Provider Systems. These included primary care providers, urgent care specialists, emergency room physicians, discharge planners, care coordinators, hospital administrators and a variety of researchers on issues that included prescription drug practice, teen pregnancy, smoking cessation, childhood asthma, mental health and overall system design. An extended thematic analysis of these interviews is provided in section 8 of this report. But major themes included:

- Poverty is, by most accounts, the overriding and most pervasive issue driving health care need in our region. Of course, Medicaid beneficiaries are poor by definition. But the impact of poverty on the income, employment status, educational attainment, regional mobility and the overall “opportunity structure” of individuals is massive. It influences all the choices individuals make about what to eat, whether to smoke, if they see a doctor, showing up for appointments, complying with regimes of medication, following doctors’ orders, and much more.
- Chronic diseases are a pervasive issue for providers, especially, and perhaps ironically, for those working in emergency settings. Diabetes, asthma, cardiac disease, pulmonary conditions, addiction and other chronic conditions are both prevalent in the population and evident in emergency departments. Of course, these have an impact throughout the health care system – for primary care providers, skilled nursing facilities, discharge planners and care coordinators.
- Lifestyle issues are also understood as a driver of health care need. Rates of tobacco use, especially among Medicaid enrollees, poor diet, lack of exercise, and dangerous behaviors lead variously to obesity, diabetes, cardiac disease, cancer, lung problems, as well as HIV and sexually transmitted diseases and unwanted and teenage pregnancy.
- Access to care is a huge, complicated and difficult issue for providers. Patients who fail to appear for scheduled appointments make it hard to maximize the benefit from scarce resources. Patients who use emergency departments instead waste even more resources. And many patients will come when they are sick but not for well visits and preventive care. But patients face a discouraging set of challenges: getting to provider sites when they don't own a car, waiting days or weeks to get an appointment, waiting hours to be seen, missing work to go to the doctor, not being able to afford co-pays or prescriptions and more.

- Compliance with prescription drugs and other doctor's orders was another important theme in the conversations. Research in the region has revealed a huge gap between what providers write in the clinic and what patients take at home. Cost is a barrier to compliance but so is confusion on the part of patients. Other ongoing research is examining where prescriber behavior departs from accepted practice – with impacts on both cost and health outcomes.
- Capacity is a key issue across primary care, specialist care and mental and behavioral health care. There's not a great financial incentive to train to be a primary care provider and significant disincentives in terms of working conditions, especially in rural areas. A broad range of specialists are also in short supply in rural quarters. The number of mental and behavioral health providers also seems inadequate to meet the need.
- Better coordination of care is identified as a pressing need across the system, in general, and specifically to address the DSRIP specific issues of unnecessary ED visits, avoidable in-patient utilization, and preventable re-admissions. The good news is that work is already under way to build better systems of coordination, through programs like the hospital-based health homes, the Patient Centered Medical Home, and Accountable Care Organizations, as well as through the individual initiative of primary care practitioners and others.
- Medicaid reimbursement structures provide some incentives that run contrary to the goals of the DSRIP program. Patients suffer no penalty for missing a medical appointment or for calling an ambulance to get to the emergency room for non-acute care. Hospitals are penalized financially for reducing ED visits. Low reimbursement levels prevent the development of urgent care facilities in locations where Medicaid patients might make most use of them. The rates also constrict supply of services by private primary care doctors even as funding for Federally Qualified Health Centers increases it.

Demographic overview

The assessment understands a series of demographic factors as indicators of health care need or health vulnerability. These are examined in greater depth in Section 2 of this report. But in general, we consider African-Americans and Latinos/Hispanics as at-risk populations, as are people over age 65 and women of childbearing age (14-44 years). All of these indicators correlate closely with measures of poverty as do levels of educational attainment, single parent households and people born in a foreign country. The number of households without access to a motor vehicle is also another powerful indicator of the ability of people to meet their health needs.

Some key observations across these indicators include:

- African-Americans are heavily concentrated in the cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls and constitute a majority of the population in several ZIP codes in each city. African-Americans also live in other locations around the metropolitan area, such as Cheektowaga. Several outlying concentrations of African-Americans are in ZIP codes where correctional facilities are located.
- Latinos/Hispanics follow a somewhat less concentrated residential pattern, with higher concentrations on Buffalo's West Side, Lackawanna and Niagara Falls, but also in Dunkirk, Jamestown, Orleans County and elsewhere. There are other concentrations of Latino residents in the ZIP codes where correctional facilities are located.
- Non-English speakers are distributed in a more complex pattern across the region. Many live in Buffalo, especially on the West Side, with its heavy refugee populations, or in Lackawanna, where many Yemeni and other Middle Easterners live. There are other clusters of non-English speakers in Jamestown, in Amherst around the University at Buffalo, and in Amish country in Cattaraugus County that may or may not be indicative of greater health need.
- Persons over 65 years reside in a still different pattern, with a lower proportion of older persons in the central cities and a much higher percentage in the suburbs of Buffalo, such as Amherst, Clarence and Elma, and in Lewiston outside of Niagara Falls. Other areas with a higher proportion of seniors are scattered across more rural areas in the region.
- Women of childbearing age (15-44 years) reflect a crucial category of potential health care need. However, outside of a concentration in the City of Buffalo and relative dearth of such women in the Erie County suburbs, there's no clear pattern of residential distribution. A closer look at which of these women are most likely to have children is needed to fully understand this potential need.
- Poverty status is perhaps the most important indicator of health care need. People at 200 percent of the Federal poverty level are overwhelmingly concentrated in the cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls and widely across the Southern Tier counties of Chautauqua, Cattaraugus and Allegany in both small cities and rural areas.
- Educational attainment is an underlying factor for poverty status and, by extension, health care need. Lowest rates of high school completion are concentrated in Buffalo and Niagara Falls and across the Southern Tier Counties. Orleans County also has some lower rates for persons with high school diplomas.
- Foreign born people may have greater health care needs as a result of dislocation from their places of origin. However, circumstances can vary widely. Immigrant and refugee populations in Buffalo and Lackawanna or migrant farm labor populations in Orleans County likely have higher needs. Foreign born people in Amherst are likely to be students or faculty at the University at Buffalo or work in industries where benefits include health insurance.
- Households without access to a vehicle provides a crucial indicator of the ability of people to obtain access to health care services. Where a vehicle is absent and given the poor state of public transit across the region, getting to appointments and filling prescriptions are onerous, sometimes impossible, tasks. As with many other indicators, concentrations of households with no vehicle are in the cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls and along the Southern Tier.

When viewed as a composite index with all factors combined in one metric a few issues move to the foreground: transportation, aging and poverty. The region ranks last among upstate regions for households without access to a vehicle. It ranks very low for population over age 65. And it ranks below average for population living at 200 percent of the federal poverty level or lower.

These factors do not affect the region uniformly. The index ranks Erie, Chautauqua and Orleans counties relatively low for demographic indicators of health need – both against the other counties in Western New York and against counties of a similar type across the state and outside of New York City.

Community structure

While the demographic analysis focuses on who people are, the analysis of community structure deals with the environments in which they live. These metrics understand that the age and quality of housing, water quality, access to fresh and healthy food, the presence or absence of crime, working conditions, and the existence of faith based organizations can all influence people's health and their ability to improve it.

- Percent of housing built before 1980 is included in our index as a proxy for lead based paint the use of which was phased out by the 1970s. The connection between lead based paint and lead poisoning is well-established. But older housing can also present problems because of the use of asbestos or allergy causing agents. Not surprisingly, Buffalo and its older suburbs, Niagara Falls, and older small cities like Jamestown, Dunkirk and Olean accounted for the highest concentrations of older housing.
- Households with well water are also homes where residents likely do not get fluoride in their drinking water – a key contributor to dental health. All of the developed areas in the metropolitan counties of Erie and Niagara have fluoridated water – and almost no wells. Well water is somewhat more common across the remainder of the region but even in the most remote areas more than 90 percent of households have fluoridated water.
- Food access is crucial to expanding household choices to provide people with a healthy diet. Access to fresh and health foods, especially fruits and vegetables, is determined by a combination of variables – proximity to food outlets and availability of transportation. Poor food access in the region is a bi-modal phenomenon. It is concentrated in Buffalo and Niagara Falls, where rates of car ownership are low, and in certain rural areas, like parts of Orleans, Wyoming and Chautauqua counties, where distances to food outlets are greater.

- Violent crime presents, not only the potential for injury or death to people who are victims of it, but also the reality of persistent stress on a day to day basis simply because one is exposed to it. Such stress has a range of consequences including affective disorders such as depression and anxiety and a tendency toward obesity. Rates of violent crime are especially high in urban areas, as the map indicates, but even higher in concentrated portions of the cities of Buffalo, Niagara Falls, Lockport, Dunkirk, Jamestown, Salamanca and Olean.
- Migrant workers represent a small but important population in terms of health care need. There are only a couple thousand such workers in the region but they are likely to have poor access to care. Most of the migrant farm workers are concentrated in Orleans and Genesee counties with a scattering of workers in Erie and elsewhere.
- Faith-based organizations can play a role in meeting the social, economic and physical – as well as spiritual – needs of people. Churches of all faiths are common throughout the region with many in rural areas, but also in generally poor neighborhoods of Buffalo, Niagara Falls and smaller cities. Even in areas where the number of faith based organizations is smaller there is often one for every 1,000 people.

Health care analytics

The community health needs assessment relies on comprehensive healthcare data provided by the state in relation to three domains: system transformation, quality of clinical care and population health metrics.

Our analysis compares performance at regional, county-wide and ZIP code specific scales. An index of key metrics compares WNY performance with the performance of all other Department of Health regions in upstate New York. It also compares counties within the region with each other and against comparable counties classified by Eberts codes. This allows us an “apples-to-apples” comparison of urban counties with urban counties and rural with rural. More about the methodology and much more about the specific analysis is available in Section 4 of this report.

System transformation metrics

Measures of system transformation include rates for potentially preventable emergency room visits and preventable 30-day in-patient re-admissions, as well as individual and composite Prevention Quality Indicators and Pediatric Quality Indicators.

For preventable ER visits, the region as a whole performs just below the statewide average. But at the county level some problems appear. Rates of unnecessary ER use are distinctly higher across the Southern Tier counties of Chautauqua, Cattaraugus and Allegany.

Western New York as a region performs very well for avoidable hospital re-admissions with the second lowest risk-adjusted rate in the state and far below the contiguous Finger Lakes, Central New York and Hudson Valley regions. Risk-adjusted rates screen out the effects of age, race and ethnicity on this analysis.

The challenge for program planners and managers will be to achieve across-the-board reductions of 25 percent on these measures even as some counties have already been relatively successful in reducing inappropriate use.

Prevention Quality Indicators for Western New York on an overall composite basis were good relative to other upstate regions but several indicators within the composite were distinctly negative. The region ranked last in the state for “angina without procedure,” a key indicator of cardiac health. WNY also was at the bottom for a cluster of diabetes related metrics including “short term complications,” “lower extremity amputations,” and the overall composite.

The PQI measure also identified Niagara and Orleans counties as potential problem communities across a wide range of indicators with each ranking last or second-last in the region on 13 of 18 items.

The regional score for Pediatric Quality Indicators was also problematic, with the composite of six other measures ranking second lowest among upstate regions and similarly low rankings for the occurrence of asthma, gastroenteritis and short-term complications from diabetes. On most of these measures, Allegany County was ranked at the bottom but the performance in Cattaraugus and Erie counties was also poor.

Quality of care measures

Clinical outcomes measures allow us to assess the quality of care provided for major medical conditions. On a composite of these measures, Western New York lags somewhat behind the middle of the pack with some counties ranking higher (Erie and Wyoming) and others lower (Cattaraugus, Orleans). On specific components of the index, however, a number of issues move to the foreground.

The region ranks last among upstate regions for testing for comprehensive diabetes care. And while Erie County ranks reasonably high on this measure others do not, including Genesee, Allegany, Cattaraugus and Orleans.

The region also ranks last upstate for “adherence to anti-psychotic medications for people living with schizophrenia,” with the lowest rankings by county in Erie and Niagara.

The issues of diabetes and mental health overlap where rankings are also relatively low for “diabetes monitoring for persons living with schizophrenia” and “diabetes screening for people living with people living with schizophrenia or bi-polar disorder using anti-psychotic medications.”

Other quality of care measures where Western New York lags includes screening for colorectal cancer and screening for breast cancer. Orleans, Allegany and Wyoming counties rank poorly against WNY counties as well as their Eberts code cohorts. Erie and Niagara, meanwhile, lead the region but lag their fellow “upstate metropolitan” counties.

Population health statistics

On broad composite measures of health status as framed by the New York State “Prevention Agenda” Western New York does relatively poorly. Across sub-categories of chronic disease, health status disparities, creating a healthy and safe environment, preventing HIV, sexually transmitted diseases and other infectious diseases, promoting mental health and preventing substance abuse, and promoting the health of women, infants and children, the region performs generally below par.

The region’s poorest ranking comes in the sub-group for HIV and STDs. However, Erie County and to a lesser extent, Niagara County, account for the bulk of the problem. This includes low rankings for HIV prevention, new cases of HIV, and disparities in HIV rates for Black and Hispanic persons, as well as high rates for gonorrhea, chlamydia and syphilis.

The region also has a relatively low composite ranking for the subgroup for chronic diseases with higher incidences of hospitalization for complications of diabetes, complications of juvenile diabetes and for heart attacks. Rates for emergency room visits for asthma and by persons 0-4 years old for asthma were also above average compared with the rest of upstate New York.

For chronic diseases and causal behaviors, a few hotspots appear in the data. Orleans and Niagara County have a very high for percentage of adults who smoke. Genesee County ranked at the bottom compared with both WNY and similar counties statewide for hospitalizations for short-term complications from juvenile diabetes. Niagara County had a similar ranking with regard to adult diabetes.

The region also ranked poorly in the sub-group for promoting a healthy and safe environment with measures for ED visits as a result of falls, ED visits due to occupational injuries, and ED visits resulting from assault-related injuries. WNY was also at the bottom in terms of the number of jurisdictions approving the Climate Smart Communities pledge and the proportion of workers who use alternative forms of transportation or work from home.

For promoting mental health and preventing substance abuse the region also did poorly but based on a relatively small number of indicators. WNY had low rankings for age-adjusted suicide rate and for binge drinking.

The composite score for promoting the health of women, infants and children was somewhat better than the others. This score, however, might obscure several other troubling individual indicators. These included bottom rankings among upstate regions for percentage of pre-term births, maternal mortality rate, teen pregnancy, unintended pregnancy, percentage of second births within 24 months of previous pregnancy, and percentage of births to Medicaid enrollees.

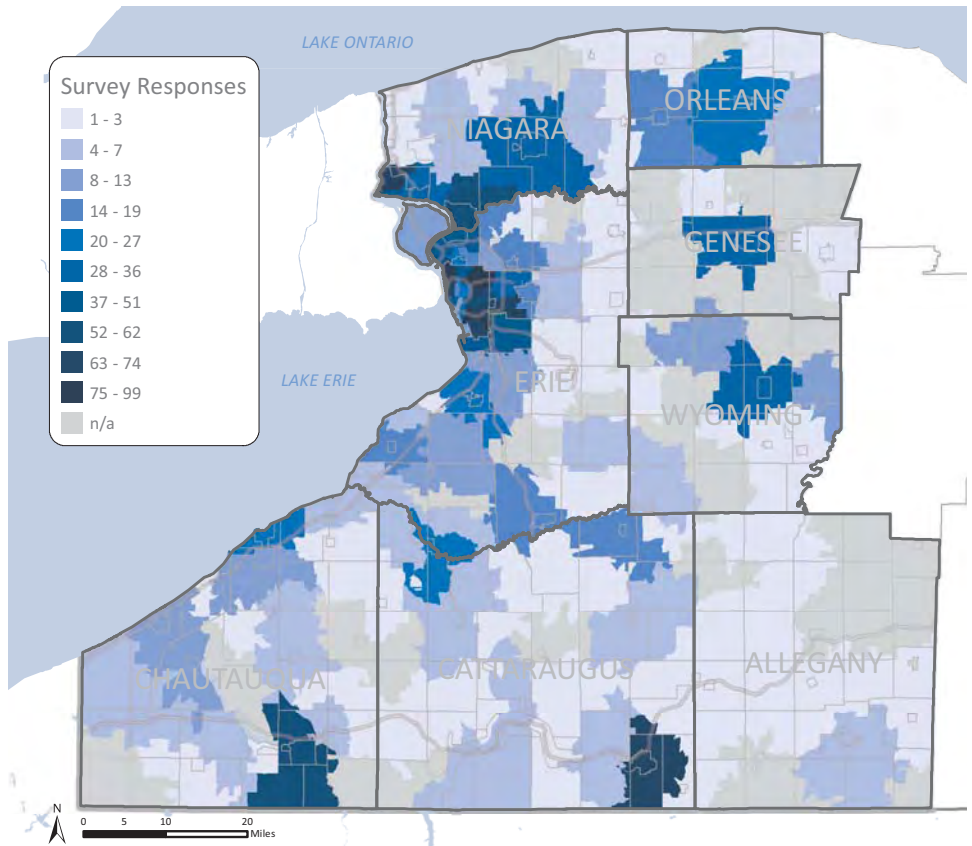

Community survey responses

The community survey, as noted elsewhere in this report, was intended as a vehicle for broad participation, not as a scientific research instrument. It sought to engage as many respondents as possible, not gather a scientific sample of health care consumers. There is no margin of error or confidence interval.

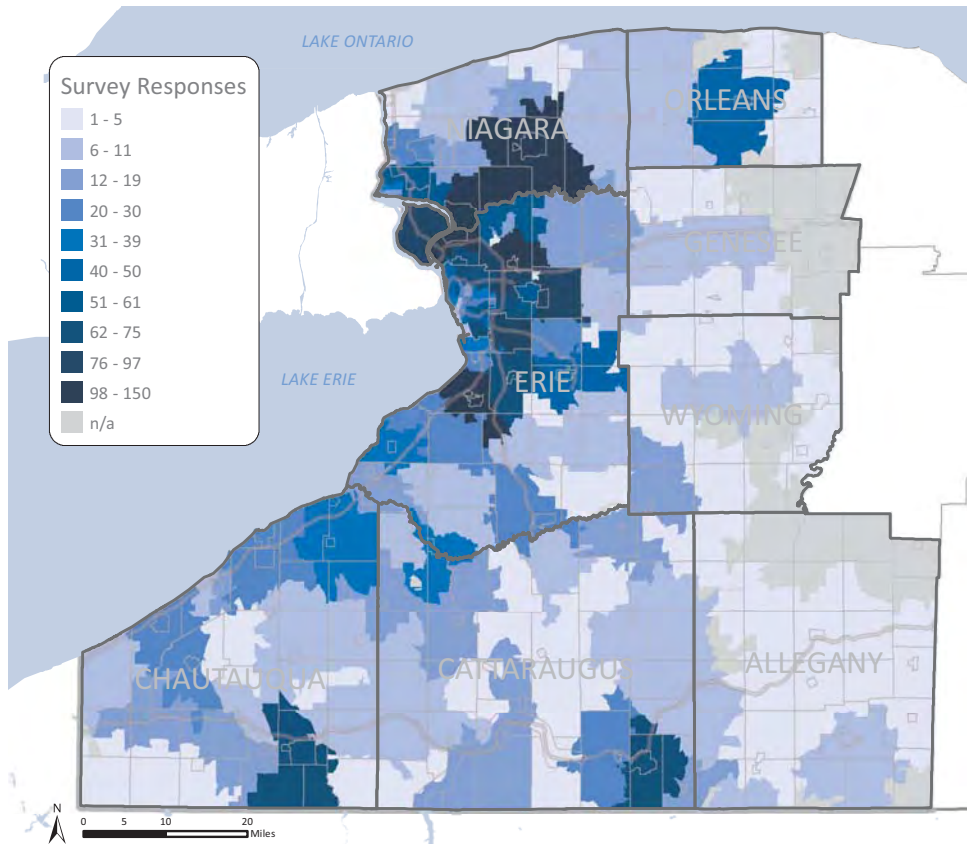

Nevertheless, the maps to the right show that the survey reached an audience roughly consistent with the overall population, Medicaid and non-Medicaid. For example, participation by Medicaid enrollees is shown stronger in the cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls. In suburban Erie County, participation by those insured by other carriers was heavier.

There are some clear differences between respondents and the population at large, however. The outlying counties of Genesee, Wyoming and Allegany, especially, are underrepresented in the survey. Erie County, in contrast, was significantly overrepresented. But overall, participation roughly follows overall population patterns.

1. Community Engagement

The assessors took to heart the State's encouragement to engage the community and hear the voice of the consumer. In Western New York this meant conducting a broad-based community survey, holding a series of "community conversations" with health care consumers around the region, and conducting in depth interviews with a broad array of health care providers.

Together, these have helped us paint a picture of the health care issues people in the region are facing today and what they think some of the solutions might be. Across survey, community conversations and provider interviews, the perspectives, frankly, are not that different. There are variations from groups to groups, from county to county and community to community. But in the "big picture" the results are very similar.

Not surprisingly, these community perspectives also correspond with findings from the analysis of comprehensive health care data. After all, community voices and data analytics all attempt to describe the same powerful reality Western New York is facing: poverty, unhealthy lifestyles, chronic disease, discontinuities of care, inefficiencies in using scarce health care resources and barriers to access.

1a. Community Survey

Introduction

The assessors, the PPS leadership and their partners across the region worked together to conduct a broad-based survey of patients in Western New York to help us understand what health care consumers are facing in taking care of their health, getting care and trying to pay for it.

The survey devised was adapted from the Behavioral Risk Factor Surveillance System which elicits information from patients about the care they are receiving and the state of their health, as well as basic demographic data on age, gender, marital status, employment and other variables. In order to address the central issue in the DSRIP program, a question was added about the respondents' health insurance status.

Beyond those basics, two other questions were asked: in the opinion of the respondent, what is the most important health problem in our community and what is the most important health care need? Although not every respondent answered these questions, they evoked an enormous volume of comment about both health problems and health care system needs.

The survey was deployed in two ways.

First was a five-page hard-copy survey that was distributed in clinical settings run by partner organizations affiliated or connected with the Performing Provider Systems. Staff on site was responsible for offering the survey to patients or clients, collecting it when they were done and returning it to the assessors. Sites included emergency departments, urgent care facilities, primary care clinics, mental health sites and other clinical locations. Surveys were offered in Burmese, Karen, Arabic, Somali and Nepali as well as English and Spanish. Some partners were aggressive in distributing the survey. Others struggled to find time to promote the survey in the course of the clinical day.

The second method to deploy the survey was an on-line version hosted on the commercial website poll daddy.com. The survey was promoted on the list serves of health care organizations, insurers, community groups and others, as well as through social media such as Facebook and by word of mouth. Typically, people clicked on a link and went immediately to the survey.

Nearly 7,000 surveys were completed – 1,800 on-line and almost 5,000 on paper. The tabulations were automatic on poll daddy.com. A commercial data entry firm tabulated the paper surveys.

This was not a scientific survey. It was not designed to capture a random sample of health care consumers. It was intended as a tool to facilitate community engagement and to reach as broad an audience as possible. That said, and with some caveats enumerated below, the results of the survey provide some interesting perspectives on the state of health care in Western New York and consumer views of the same.

Demographics of the survey

The population represented in the survey results does not exactly reflect the composition of the population of the region – but it is close in many respects.

The age distribution of responses is roughly comparable to the age distribution of the adult population. The proportions of respondents who said they are insured by Medicaid, Medicare or both are roughly comparable to the actual numbers. And the proportion of people who are married versus single is similar to the whole population.

There are some important differences, too. Because of the way the survey was distributed, Erie County is significantly overrepresented in the sample. Residents of Erie County represent just under three-fifths of the total regional population; they are slightly more than two-thirds of the survey respondents. Several other counties are only slightly under-represented – Niagara, Orleans, Cattaraugus and Wyoming. Only Chautauqua and Allegany counties were significantly under-represented.

Women were far more likely to respond to the survey – representing slightly more than half the adult population in the region but nearly two-thirds of respondents. For similar reasons, health care industry employees were heavily over-represented. There are many women in health care and the survey was promoted – on-line and hard-copy – by health care organizations. And because the survey was promoted aggressively to Medicaid members in particular the proportion of those employed versus the unemployed, retired or disabled was smaller than the actual population.

Nevertheless, the survey's data on self-reported well-being, access to care, sources of health information, hospital use and health status provide a useful complement to other health care data sources. Likewise, consumer suggestions about how to improve the health care experience and their answers to open ended questions provide some interesting – although not usually surprising – perspectives on the state of health care.

General well being

Survey respondents were asked whether there were 14 or more days in the previous month when their physical health was not good. Overall, 23 percent said their health had not been good. But when examined by insurance category we see that Medicaid, Medicare and dual eligible individuals were roughly two and a half times more likely to report ill health than those with employer provided insurance.

A similar pattern appeared when people were asked whether there were 14 or more days in the previous month when their mental health was not good. But in this case the rate of self-reported ill health for Medicaid enrollees was four times the rate for the employer insured – 34 percent to eight percent. In the case of both physical and mental health, the differences in rates between counties is likely unreliable because of the small number of responses from some counties.

The picture was about the same when respondents were asked if their physical or mental health kept them from their usual activities for more than 14 days in the previous month. Fully 38 percent of Medicaid members said there were – four times the rate of employer insured respondents. Medicare and dual eligible patients were disrupted from their usual activities more than three times as often as the employer insured.

The survey contained a battery of questions – adapted from the Behavioral Risk Factor Surveillance System survey – about what specific and standard types of care patients had received. These questions allow a comparison between what is considered appropriate care, especially screening for common diseases, and what patients actually experience. They also help identify the prevalence of some common barriers to access such as cost, transportation and lack of a primary care provider.

When asked if the respondent has needed to see a doctor within the past year but was unable to do so because of cost about 12 percent region-wide said yes. But for those who are uninsured nearly 60 percent said that issues of cost had prevented them from seeing a doctor. And interestingly one quarter of those with insurance through the state Affordable Care Act also said they had been unable to afford a doctor visit.

Likewise, across the board for Medicaid, Medicare, employer insured and others alike, nearly four-fifths had visited a doctor for a routine checkup in the previous year. Only the uninsured departed from the trend. Only 42 percent of respondents without health insurance said they had been for a regular checkup last year.

Access to dental care is somewhat different. For the employer insured and those with commercial insurance, more than three-quarters had been to a dentist in the previous twelve months. Of those with Medicaid, Medicare, dual eligible and those with ACA exchange coverage, 60 percent or less had seen a dentist in the prior year. And those with no insurance at all were least likely to have seen a dentist – only about 37 percent.

Access to care (cont'd)

Women's health screening – mammograms and pap tests – varied significantly by type of insurance. Even among those with employer provided insurance about 27 percent of women responding said they had never had a mammogram. The average for all women was 38 percent who had never had the exam. For those on Medicaid more than half – 54 percent – had not been screened for breast cancer. Those without insurance were even worse off – fully 71 percent had never had a mammogram.

[Note: It's important to read the accompanying tables carefully because most of those who gave no answer were likely men. The percentages cited above and below took into account only women.]

For pap tests the disparities were similar while the level of care provided was better. Only seven percent of women covered by their employer's insurance had never had a pap test. The average for all women was 15 percent. Twenty-three percent of Medicaid enrollees had never been screened for cervical cancer. Even for those without insurance the rate was 30 percent.

Answers about screening for colorectal cancer also reveal a significant disparity – even when accounting for age differences across the insurance categories. (We divided the percentage of those reporting having had such screening by the percentage of people in that category who were 45 years or older to obtain an age-adjusted rate of screening). Across the region about 70 percent of age-appropriate patients had been screened for colorectal cancer. Those with Medicaid (72 percent) and employer insurance (74%) did better. Those with Medicare did slightly worse (65 percent) and those without insurance even worse (56 percent screened for colorectal cancer).

The survey presented startling evidence that the majority of diagnosed hypertension is untreated. Across the entire region nearly 57 percent of respondents who said they had been diagnosed with high blood pressure were not being treated for it. Even when looking at only those with employer provided insurance, 52 percent of those diagnosed were being treated for hypertension. Among Medicaid members (65 percent untreated) and the uninsured (81 percent) the situation was even worse. Only among Medicare patients was a clear majority of diagnosed cases of hypertension being treated.

The record on screening for cholesterol was significantly better but the disparities, again, were broad. Three-quarters of all respondents said they had had their cholesterol checked at some point. Eighty-eight percent of the employer insured got their cholesterol checked. But only 66 percent of Medicaid members were screened. Fewer than half of those with no insurance – 44 percent – said they were checked.

Fourteen percent of respondents said they had been diagnosed with diabetes – about one in seven individuals regionally. Again, there were significant disparities by insurance type. While only nine percent of those with employer insurance had been so diagnosed, the rate of diabetes diagnosis for Medicaid members (17 percent), Medicare enrollees (21 percent) and dual eligible persons (30 percent) was significantly higher.

The regional rate for those reporting having been diagnosed with asthma was also high – about 22 percent. Again, some disparity was apparent. The rate for Medicaid members was nearly double the rate for those with employer insurance – 30 percent vs. 17 percent.

Survey results suggest that people who live in outlying counties in the region are somewhat less likely to have a primary care provider who is located in the county where they live than residents of either Erie or Chautauqua County. Eighty-eight percent of Erie County residents reported that their primary care doctor does business in the county. For Wyoming County and Allegany County residents the rate was 66 and 65 percent respectively. In Genesee, Niagara, Orleans and Cattaraugus County roughly one-quarter of respondents said they had to travel outside their county of residence to see their primary care physician.

Two more questions in the survey highlighted the challenges for some – but especially Medicaid enrollees – in simply getting to sites of care. Asked whether they had needed to see a doctor in the past year but could not because they were unable to travel, 19 percent of Medicaid members said yes. Asked then if their inability to travel was because of a lack of transportation, 39 percent said yes. That means that seven percent of Medicaid members were unable to see a doctor because of limits on travel and transportation. For those with employer insurance the comparable rate was two-tenths of one percent.

Two questions also explored the connection between physical health care and mental health care. One asked patients if they were being treated for emotional health problems did they feel they were being well taken care of for their physical health. A second question reversed the relationship between physical and emotional health. With the exception of those who have no health insurance, and regardless of county, respondents were more likely satisfied than unsatisfied with the combination of care for physical and emotional problems.

The big difference was between Medicaid insured and dual eligibles and those with employer insurance in terms of how many were receiving care for both mental and physical problems. Eighty-four and 86 percent of the former groups were getting care for both mental and physical health problems. Only 38 percent of employer insured were receiving care for both types of condition. Clearly, for the vast majority of the poor, poor physical health and poor mental health go together.

Source of health care information

If the involvement of the patient in preventive care is a key to good health, then patient “health literacy,” and by extension, access to health information is crucial. Where that information comes from is also of profound importance. With the exception of the uninsured, people across the region are most likely to get their health information from their primary care provider. After that, people rely on friends and family to learn about health issues. It is striking, however, that the uninsured go more often to friends and family than a primary care provider and are more likely than any other group to rely on information found on the internet.

Hospital and emergency room use

Changing patterns of in-patient and emergency department utilization are central to achieving the goals of the DSRIP program. Among respondents to the survey, about one in five was admitted to a hospital in the past year. Medicaid, Medicare and dual eligible persons, however were much more likely to be admitted than those in other groups. Indeed, the hospitalization rate for Medicaid enrollees was nearly two and a half times that of persons who were employer insured.

The survey results also confirm data on which the DSRIP program was based – namely that Medicaid members are much more likely to use the emergency room than those otherwise insured. Fully 45 percent of people insured by Medicaid used an emergency room last year as compared with only 19 percent of the employer insured. The overall average for the region was 30 percent.

Issues of chronic pain, arthritis, joint pain and related problems are not widely discussed in community conversations, provider interviews or in the open-ended questions of this survey. But these issues pop out of the data in the community survey. There are not significant disparities either by insurance type or by county. What is remarkable is that when asked if they have “had symptoms of pain, aching or stiffness in or around a joint during the past 30 days which began more than three months ago” 45 percent said yes. To put it another way, nearly half the people surveyed are living with long-term chronic pain but aren’t saying much about it.

Cigarette smoking continues to be a major threat to health. Thirty percent of those surveyed reported smoking cigarettes on a regular basis – which is higher than other data sources indicate. What is noteworthy in the extreme is the disparity in smoking rates between Medicaid members and those without insurance and mostly everyone else. Nearly half of Medicaid enrollees say they are smokers (49 percent) and almost as large a share of the uninsured (48 percent). But only 16 percent of those with employer insurance are smokers.

Across the region, binge drinking – five or more drinks on one occasion, four for women – was reported by 17 percent of all respondents. Among Medicaid, Medicare and dual eligible persons, the rate was well below average: 13 percent, 10 percent and 9 percent respectively. Twenty-one percent of those insured through their employer engaged in binge drinking – above the regional average. Most likely to binge drink, however, were the uninsured – an apparently age-related result.

Asked whether they considered themselves obese or overweight, roughly half of all respondents across the region responded that they did. The rate varied little across insurance categories and counties of residence, with one exception. Only 35 percent of those with no insurance reported themselves as overweight or obese – possibly another age-related result. Rates for obesity alone from clinical data are much lower. But when offered the choice of “... or overweight” a total of 48 percent are prompted to say “yes.”

Those results seem somewhat at odds with the self-report of survey respondents about getting regular exercise or activity. Nearly two-thirds of respondents said they do “participate in any physical activities or exercise such as running, calisthenics, golf, gardening or walking for exercise.” One is forced to wonder why such regular exercise isn’t doing more to help people stay at a healthy weight, especially since more than half of survey respondents admit they don’t eat the recommended five servings of fruits and vegetables daily.

Suggested improvements to primary care

Survey respondents were invited to choose from a list of potential improvements to the primary care experience. People could check as many boxes as they wished. The responses across the board are instructive. The top five items suggested were “shorter times to schedule appointments” (19 percent), hours of operation (14 percent), more advice on diet and exercise (11 percent), better follow up care (11 percent) and responsiveness of staff (10 percent).

The next most common answers were more advice on preventive measures, more advice on medications, more convenient location and better quality of the waiting area – all with about seven percent of the responses. City planners joke that parking is always the most important issue in urban development. Not so in this sample. Only about 5 percent of total responses were about parking.

One of the more interesting results for this question was that people with employer insurance were roughly twice as likely to name extended hours of operation as an important improvement than Medicaid, Medicare and dual eligible individuals. This is in contrast to the observation that Medicaid patients often use the emergency room because their primary care provider is not open after regular business hours.

Open ended questions

The survey also offered participants an opportunity to say – without prompting – what they consider is the most important health problem in their community and what they believe is the most pressing health care system need. The answers that came back provide a richly textured picture of health care need in Western New York.

The two questions were intended to be complementary: “what’s the problem” and “what’s the solution?” As might be expected, the answers we got to one question were often just the flip side of the ones we got to the other. As such, the top-level analysis combines answers from both questions but maintains the distinction between answers from respondents who are Medicaid enrollees (and dual eligible) and those with other forms of insurance.

Any thematic summary of the 8,213 individual responses to the two open ended questions risks obscuring the richness of depth and detail of what survey participants had to share. Taken as a whole, the responses are thoughtful and knowledgeable. They provide evidence to back the old adage that we are smarter together than we are as individuals. Nevertheless, it is possible to highlight some of the major points raised.

It is striking how much emphasis respondents put on the observation that too many Western New Yorkers are obese or overweight. And following medical doctrine, they typically ascribed the problem to a lack of healthy eating habits and regular exercise. If we combine responses about obesity, lifestyle and diabetes we see that one comment in five was focused on this theme.

Not surprisingly, then, many respondents made the connection between obesity and lifestyle with a range of chronic diseases that our health care analytics also show are too prevalent in our region: diabetes, heart disease, cancer, respiratory diseases and others.

Many, and especially the non-Medicaid respondents, were seemingly overwhelmed by the cost of care, both directly, and through their insurance premiums. High deductibles and co-pays compound the problem. Some are not sure the Affordable Care Act has helped them and others are resentful of those who benefit from Medicaid.

Access to care was another major concern, in terms of the supply of providers as well as the challenges of scheduling, waiting, getting insurance accepted, not to mention actually getting to the doctor’s office or clinic.

Respondents, especially those who are insured through the Medicaid program, noted the prevalence of mental illness in our community and the inadequacy of available treatment for the same. Hard data also bear this out.

People were also deeply concerned about drug and alcohol abuse as well as other substance abuse issues like cigarette smoking. As with mental health issues, they noted the lack of resources to deal with these problems.

Many respondents seemed to understand that education is also a key issue in improving health care. Without greater knowledge or “health literacy,” people can’t be their own first-line health care provider. They can’t improve their diets, manage their medications or participate in their own care.

Many were unhappy with the relationship they have with their primary care provider. They don’t listen, they don’t take time, they don’t care were common refrains. Others were dissatisfied with the overall mode of medicine which they see as focused on fixing problems with surgery and drugs rather than dealing with the root causes of health and disease.

Transportation is an important issue, especially for the Medicaid population. The challenges of getting to care in a dispersed region can be daunting.

Many understood that the best forms of health care are preventative. Certainly when taken together with comments on education, lifestyle and the importance of primary care, this is an even stronger theme than it first appears.

Respondents also recognized that there is a need to better coordinate health care, to communicate better, to attend to follow-up care, and connect the dots from one provider to another. Others emphasized the need for individuals to take more responsibility for their health and health care.

A number of respondents noted the influence that poverty, unemployment and other embedded socio-economic conditions have on the health of the population.

Finally, respondents mentioned a range of more specific health conditions that were of concern to them: respiratory issues like COPD and asthma, a range of infectious diseases, pain management, and issues relating to the aging process.

While those insured through Medicaid (and those also eligible for Medicare) shared many of the concerns of those insured by others, the two groups put distinctly different emphases on these issues. Those differences speak eloquently to the distance between those poor enough to qualify for Medicaid and those affluent enough to be insured by their employers or themselves.

Both groups were concerned about mental health and substance abuse but those on Medicaid expressed those concerns at roughly double the frequency of the otherwise insured. This is due in part, perhaps, to the means of distribution of the survey, but it also seems likely that Medicaid members are more impacted by these issues than the others.

Both groups were concerned about the cost of care, but those who are insured through their employer or out of their own pockets or who may not be insured at all were three times more likely to reference cost as an issue than those on Medicaid.

Interestingly, the two groups were roughly as likely to be concerned about issues obesity, diet and exercise and diabetes as the other. Medicaid members mentioned the issue a little less than one comment in five, non-Medicaid insured a little more than one in five.

Also worth noting, those insured through the Medicaid program were somewhat less likely to express concerns about access to care – a result that will seem counter-intuitive for some.

Methodology

Not every respondent took the time to fill out the open-ended questions. Fewer Medicaid enrollees completed the question than people otherwise insured. The answers ranged in size from a single word to a hundred-word essay. It seems it was easier to write more on-line than on the hard copy survey. But whatever the variables, these answers constitute an incredibly rich source of public commentary on an issue and a system that touches all our lives.

Tabulating and analyzing answers to open-ended questions is challenging. The process is, by its very nature, interpretive. But the answers were carefully quantified and sorted by issue and theme.

It's important to note that every distinct idea was counted, not just every response. For example, if a person wrote simply "obesity," one reference to obesity was added to the tally. But if a person wrote "obesity because of poor diet and lack of exercise leading to diabetes," the tallies for "obesity," "diet/nutrition," "exercise/sedentary lifestyle," and "diabetes" were all increased by one.

The tabulation and analysis also attempts to group responses by theme. Thus, for example, heart attacks, hypertension, high cholesterol, stroke and congestive heart failure are all grouped under "heart health." As a result, the tallies have a two level hierarchy – major categories on top and related issues below.

A table below summarizes the top ten issues or themes from each question for each county with answers from Medicaid enrollees and people otherwise insured reported and analyzed separately. (A full transcript of the tally of responses by county and insurer will be provided in a subsequent edition of this assessment, as will a finer-grained analysis of these answers).

1b. Community Conversations

Introduction

*“Listen to the people. Everyone here is saying the same thing and it seems that no one is listening.”
Participant at the Medina Memorial Hospital focus group hosted at the Calvary Tabernacle food pantry”*

The P2 Collaborative of Western New York held a series of focus groups with area residents to better understand from the patient’s point-of-view what aspects of the regional health care system work well or need improvement. The focus groups were a component of a broader community engagement effort associated to the Community Needs Assessment process taking place in the region under the directive of the New York State Department of Health’s Delivery System Reform Incentive Program. The feedback received through the focus groups is expected to inform the projects being developed by participating health care providers, especially the projects that will impact traditionally underserved individuals.

The focus group meetings took place between August 26 and September 30, 2014 at various locations throughout the region. Host organizations and venues were selected based on geographic location, current affiliation with a performing provider system (PPS) project plan application, type of community residents served (e.g. the unemployed, individuals with developmental disabilities), and past participation in a P2 Collaborative community engagement project. Balancing the perspectives of urban and rural residents and reaching concentrations of Medicaid members were also considered.

Host organizations received flyers and advertising suggestions to invite people to the meetings. Attendance was incentivized by offering refreshments and a $10 Tops gift card at the meeting. Two hundred and ten people attended the meetings, including employees and volunteers of a few health care providers (which may have increased the proportion of commercially insured individuals present). The majority of participants attended a focus group held at an urban location (75 percent). The meetings consisted of a discussion and an optional personal background information questionnaire. P2 Collaborative-trained staff and consultants facilitated the meetings.

Approximately, 90 percent of attendees completed the questionnaire. Questionnaire responses reveal that slightly more than half of all focus group participants were female (65 percent), and that the most represented age groups were those of people 50-64 years old (35 percent) and 18-34 years old (23 percent). Although there were individuals from several racial and ethnic groups, the majority of participants identified as White (60 percent). Only 12 percent of attendees said they lacked health insurance, and among those who did have health insurance, the most common sources of insurance were (1) a current or former employer (39 percent); (2) Medicaid, medical assistance, or another kind of government assistance plan for those with low incomes or a disability (33 percent); and (3) Medicare for people 65 and older or for certain disabilities (30 percent). When asked about their overall health, approximately one third of participants said their health is average, about a fifth said it was worse than average, and the rest said it was better than average. When asked about their mood over the past month, which was taken as an indicator of mental health, the vast majority of participants indicated that it had been “happy, positive or optimistic” (43 percent) or “neutral or content” (42 percent). (For detailed results, please refer to Appendix 1.)

Discussion Summary

The main points from the discussions at each focus group are described in the following three sections.

What’s working well

Some of the most common positive experiences in the healthcare system reported were:

- Coverage of home care aids, independent living, nursing homes, and hospice care.
- Technological improvements, including visit summary print outs to help patients remember important things, immediate results, online medication lookup, sending prescriptions directly to pharmacy, and patient portals.
- Availability of safety net clinics in high need areas with open access hours, functioning like urgent care centers.
- Providers that slow down and listen to patients, are receptive to patient advocacy and engagement, and are compassionate and non-judgmental to people with mental health issues.
- Providers sharing information before procedures, especially across disciplines.
- Insurance companies that reach out to the uninsured to get coverage, and are helpful and explain options well.
- Good referral systems. Primary care providers that send people to good/the right specialists.

What’s not working well

Some of the most common negative experiences in the healthcare system included:

Affordability

Despite the fact that most participants had some kind of health insurance or assistance managing the costs of health care, many still perceive that the cost of care is too expensive. The most common complaint was that out-of-pocket expenses are high, especially for the working poor. Another frequent critique was that transportation to medical appointments and to related services, and certain types of medical equipment are generally not covered by insurance. Transportation, equipment, and medications cost more than what many patients can pay.

"We all know that the better insurance someone has, the better care they get." – Participant at Community Health Center of Buffalo focus group

Transportation

Many participants indicated that they have difficulty accessing care or following up with care due to transportation difficulties. Although the types of difficulties experienced (for example, lack of own vehicle or public transportation) were not recorded in the focus group notes, the notes did mention factors that make those difficulties even more challenging. These factors include: a perceived trend in doctors relocating their offices away from populated areas; the providers covered by the insured's network being far away from the insured's residential location, especially for those on Medicaid and those seeking specialist care; non-emergency transportation services not being included in coverage.

Quality of care for low income patients

Low income patients, including those on Medicaid, perceive that they receive substandard care and fewer options than privately insured patients. The source of these perception problems appears to come from provider communication and administration issues.

Communication

This took many forms: providers (including ancillary staff) speaking "down" to patients and treating them with a lack of dignity or respect; providers unable to speak with patients in a culturally or linguistically appropriate manner; or providers speaking medical jargon and confusing instructions to patients at a level which they cannot understand. Take for instance the Tuscarora Nation focus group's discussion about the importance of pre- and perinatal care that is culturally appropriate. Nation-based community health workers visit new moms and babies in the hospital and tie a piece of leather around the babies’ wrists as a traditional practice, only to find out on a follow-up visit that hospital providers have cut the piece of leather off without the mother’s permission. This enforces the belief of an “us versus them” stance as it pertains to the healthcare system.

Wait times

Care is not always available when patients seek it. For primary care and specialist visits, they have to wait too long to get appointments. Several said they would rather go to an urgent care clinic or the emergency room. A few mentioned that office administration can be slow and disorganized.

“If I’m really sick, I’ll just go to the ER because it’s quicker. If I go to [hospital name redacted], I know I’ll be out within the hour.” – Participant at Community Health Center of Buffalo focus group

“They just make you wait. They don’t care if you’re going to bleed out in the ER waiting room. They don’t care if you die there. They just make you sit there and wait.” - Participant at Group Ministries focus group

Continuity of care

Whether for the same condition or for different conditions, patients often see many different providers, frequently in very different settings and find it hard or tiring to communicate their health issues and needs to each one. Many are also frustrated by staff turnover linked to student/residency rotations, provider retirement and attrition in rural settings. With regards to insurance providers, some mentioned dissatisfaction with not having received instructions on how to switch insurance when the company dropped Medicaid.

Behavioral health

Reported challenges with the current behavioral health system varied. They included the following:

- Lack of behavioral health providers in urban and rural areas
- Lack of behavioral health providers which accept Medicaid
- Lack of knowledge in how to access behavioral health providers when in need
- Lack of behavioral health providers within primary care settings to address comorbid mental illness and its effect on treatment adherence

- Insurance company regulations which limit the extent patients can access behavioral health providers (e.g. only paying for 7 days of a 30 day inpatient substance use detox stay)
- Stigma surrounding initiating and maintaining behavioral health treatment

Other

Other issues mentioned included: lack of enough specialists; insufficient amount of social workers to deal with issues that aren’t strictly medical, including those linked to generational poverty; and confusion navigating the new health insurance system.

What needs to be improved

Among the PPS-identified projects that received the most support from focus group attendees were:

- Lower costs
- Improve provider communication across the board
- Local PPSs adoption of culturally appropriate practices in their maternal and child health work and beyond.
- Guarantee quality care regardless of insurance type. Go beyond bare minimum for Medicaid patients.
- Allow more Medicaid coverage.
- Integration of primary care and behavioral health.
- Number of clinics with evening and/or weekend hours to accommodate patients that have difficulty finding time off work to get care. More clinics without need for appointments. More places that function as “one stop shops,” where the patient could see a primary care provider, get diagnostic tests or imaging, and receive prescription refills all in one visit.

Questions	Data sought from responses
“Based on your experience and knowledge of the healthcare system, what are some things that work well?”	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Facilitators of appropriate utilization of the healthcare system • Positive aspects of care process from a patient perspective • Opportunities for DSRIP strategies to become better accepted by the public and more patient-centered
“What are some of the negative aspects of the healthcare system – what are some things that make it harder to get the care you need, when and where you need it?”	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Barriers to appropriate utilization of the healthcare system • Previously unknown factors that may limit success of DSRIP initiatives • Potential “trouble spots” for DSRIP initiatives to address prior to implementation

Conclusion and Recommendations

The conclusions that can be drawn from these meetings are limited due to the following factors: small sample size (210 participants), short turnaround time, limited ability of the host organizations to work in partnership, participant recruitment challenges (e.g. holding meetings during the busy “back to school” weeks), and influence of host organization volunteers and staff in some of the meetings. However, it is clear that many of the concerns voiced by the community through the focus group process resulted from effects of a siloed healthcare system that is not integrated in a manner that addresses patients’ healthcare needs.

Solutions that can be adapted from this feedback to make improvements in Domain 2: System Transformation include:

- Care coordination, electronic health record interoperability, and “one-stop-shop” care settings – This could ensure better navigation of appropriate care once it is accessed and better transitions of care across settings, which would reduce the risk of gaps or missed services, and increased likelihood of patient adherence to treatment protocol.
- Increased focus on social service organizations and their unique role within the healthcare system – This can address many social determinants of health, which affect treatment adherence and other patient-level barriers to appropriate care.
- Telemedicine – This was noted in rural focus groups as an opportunity to expand access to a limited rural provider network.
- Better “bedside manners” – Defined as a key factor in patients’ desire and ability to trust the recommendations of their providers, patients’ sense of distrust in the healthcare system is very real and an essential point to consider in service delivery reform as it can lead to inappropriate utilization of the health care system. For example, it can affect patients’ ability to comply with instructions and foster a sense of hostility when determining provider credibility. Care must be delivered in a culturally competent, understandable fashion with a focus on respect and a sense of value to every patient, regardless of background. The care that will be delivered must match the needs of the population served.
- Provider turnover – This too can negatively influence the development of relationships and rapport with patients, a risk factor for inconsistent or inappropriate care.

Solutions applicable to Domain 3: Clinical Improvements include:

- Integration of hospice and palliative care expansion in DSRIP project plans.
- Integration of primary care and behavioral health.

Solutions that apply to Domain 4: Population Wide Strategies/NY Prevention Agenda include:

- Promotion of mental health and prevention of substance abuse.

1c. Provider Interviews

Introduction

An extended panel of health care provider interviews sketches a portrait of a regional health care system struggling to address the needs of an economically distressed Medicaid population beset by serious chronic health problems including obesity, diabetes, heart disease, mental illness, substance abuse, teen-age pregnancy and more.

Medicaid patients face a range of barriers to getting care, especially transportation and geographic access to providers, burdensome out-of-pocket costs for care, and shortages of primary care and mental health providers, particularly in rural areas of the region. Those who serve them must address, in turn, high rates of broken appointments, patients misusing emergency departments, not following doctors' instructions, not taking prescribed medications and engaging in a range of dangerous or self-destructive behaviors including smoking, substance abuse, poor eating habits, lack of exercise and more.

Lack of coordination and continuity of care – both in general and for difficult populations – is a challenge that often presents in terms of resource-intensive “frequent flyers” in emergency and in-patient settings. But it is challenge that is beginning to be addressed through the Patient Center Medical Home, hospital-based Health Homes, Accountable Care Organizations and other home-grown population health management approaches.

Approach

Research for the assessment included interviews with a wide range of health care providers. These were conducted in order to gain a better understanding of the issues behind the numbers in our analysis of data on demographics, community structure and health care analytics. These front-line providers offered us valuable insights into the dynamics of health care provision on the ground in Western New York – what the problems are, how they have developed and what needs to be done to solve them.

Those interviewed (listed at right) included hospital administrators, emergency department staff, urgent care providers, primary care doctors in a range of settings, mental health providers, discharge planners, care managers, wellness educators, health care researchers, plus providers who focus variously on maternal and infant care, childhood asthma, tobacco cessation, addiction treatment and more.

All told, 45 people were interviewed. All interview subjects were suggested by representatives of the Performing Provider Systems. Nearly all of the interviews were conducted in person. Some were one-on-one conversations. Others involved two or three individuals from the same organization. In one case a small focus group of six mental health providers was held. All followed a generally unstructured format seeking, in each case, what the interview subject had to contribute to the research behind the assessment. The interviews were not recorded but hand-written notes were transcribed as text files.

The analysis below is, of necessity, an intuitive and high-level summary of more than 40 hours of conversation with health care providers. In some cases, the sources for a particular observation are identified, but in most instances they are not. Indeed, most of the observations reflect the input of more than one interviewee.

Analysis

Poverty

Looming over nearly all the conversations with providers was the issue of the persistent poverty of the Medicaid population. Of course, Medicaid enrollees are poor – or nearly poor – by definition. But the interwoven issues of education, employment, housing, transportation, environmental quality and more at every turn make health needs greater and make getting proper health care more difficult.

The poor are more likely than others to have limited access to healthy food choices, our informants told us, and more likely to suffer from the effects of poor diet. They have less access to recreation and fitness facilities and activities. And the results are seen in high rates of obesity, diabetes and complications of diabetes.

The poor are far more likely to lack access to an automobile and more likely to be dependent on public transit. In securing access to health care, they are often dependent on special transportation services for Medicaid members. Primary care providers attribute some of the high rates of broken appointments to the transportation barriers their patients face. Lack of an automobile also makes it harder for the poor to get to the pharmacy to fill a prescription or to visit a therapist or specialist when they are referred to one.

The poor are more likely to live in older housing, often substandard, more frequently with problems of lead based paint or poor indoor air quality which can be connected with the incidence of asthma and other maladies. Even in more rural areas where rates of home-ownership are higher the value of owner-occupied homes may be far lower. With poor housing, as the Healthy Homes research showed, can come toxic or dangerous neighborhood environments.

Neighborhoods in which the poor reside are more likely to see high rates of violent crime, which can contribute, not only to higher rates of injury and death, but also to high levels of stress as a result of living with the potential for crime, which in turn has been connected to higher rates of obesity.

Low rates of educational attainment are a big part of what determines the poverty condition. Those with only a high school diploma or with no diploma earn significantly less than people with more education. But the less well-educated are also more likely to have less knowledge of health issues specifically, which makes them less capable of meeting their own health care needs.

Chronic disease and lifestyle

The overarching reality of health care in Western New York is about chronic disease driven mostly by life-style. Informants across the board report high levels of cardiac disease, obesity and diabetes, asthma, cancer and the maladies of aging such as congestive heart failure and chronic obstructive pulmonary disease. The statistics show it. Patients in the WNY DSRIP survey are aware of it. Health care providers live with it every day.

People eat too much and eat badly. They drink too much. Too many people still smoke. Most lead sedentary lives and most don't exercise regularly (although many in the survey for this report claimed they do). Many engage in unprotected sex. Drug abuse is common. The results are both predictable and familiar to providers.

Richard Elman, head of the Emergency Department at South Buffalo Mercy reports that most of his acute admissions are actually patients with long-term chronic illnesses who have reached some kind of crisis. Their route to the emergency room began long ago in the habits of everyday life.

The link to lifestyle may be seen most dramatically, as Myron Glick at Jericho Road observed, in the transition of refugee and immigrant patients suffering from Third World diseases such as tuberculosis, malaria and typhus to acquiring distinctly Western maladies like diabetes, hypertension and emphysema.

"We are not treating root causes," one provider said.

Instead, obesity, among children as well as adults, is rampant. Bariatric surgery, another provider noted, has become "the lobotomy of the 21st century." Gestational diabetes is also common.

But the cause of the problem is more than poor choices by individuals. Gail Mayeaux and Anne Marie Zimmerman at Universal Primary Care in Olean have worked hard to promote healthy snacks at public meetings and in schools and supported the work of food pantries, soup kitchens and farm stands that improve access to healthy food. Implementation of ideas like "complete streets" or "rails to trails" can also change the environment that otherwise supports unhealthy habits.

Smoking is more prevalent among the poor than other segments of the population. The fact that cheap cigarettes are available in the Seneca Nation of Indians has something to do with a 26 percent adult smoking rate in Cattaraugus County. And its effects touch not only smokers but children of smokers and all those exposed to second-hand smoke. Some public housing authorities in the Southern Tier allow smoking in complexes that have common ventilation systems.

Misuse of Emergency Departments

Inappropriate utilization of emergency room services is a significant fact of life for the health care system in Western New York and elsewhere. Rates of preventable visits range from moderate to severe across the region. But the costs to the system are real.

There are multiple reasons patients seek care in the ED rather than with their primary care provider. For some it is simply a matter of convenience. It's necessary to call for an appointment with one's PCP while you can simply walk in to the ED. Emergency rooms are open 168 hours a week compared with 40 at the primary care doctor's office or maybe 72 hours at an urgent care facility.

Some providers say some patients lack "impulse control," unable to wait to see a doctor the next day for a condition that is clearly not acute. Patients insured by Medicaid face no financial penalty for using the ED in place of a primary provider. But many use the ED as a means to avoid missing work. At WCA Hospital in Jamestown, 57 percent of ED cases could be dealt with in a primary care setting – and the majority of those visits come between 4 p.m. and 8 p.m.

Refugees and recent immigrants may be less likely to use the ED as are some rural residents who like to "tough it out." Others however go to the emergency room because they have greater confidence in the quality of care they will receive. Some asthma patients go to the ED because they believe the medicine dispensed there works better than the medicine from the pharmacy (it doesn't).

Some providers suggest that people taking themselves to the hospital for other than acute conditions is a pattern that will never change. Instead, the system should adapt to patient preferences and organize to provide better care more economically at or adjacent to the ED. Unfortunately, patients who use an emergency department for non-acute care might not have the connection to a family doctor and the associated preventive care or continuity of care.

Transportation

As noted above, lack of adequate transportation is a pervasive issue for people seeking health care, especially those located in rural areas or more distant suburbs, providers report. Getting to medical appointments, to specialists, to the pharmacy, even getting to the grocery store for healthy food is a challenge for those who lack access to an automobile. They depend on friends or family, inadequate public transit or specialty van services.

Public transit is relatively weak even at the center of the region. Service to Buffalo's suburbs, Niagara Falls, and Lockport is spotty. OATS in Olean and CATS in Jamestown and Dunkirk areas provide limited service. Van services sponsored by Medicaid require significant advance notice for pick-up. And all of the options may require that patients go very early and stay much later than their appointment just to make connections.

Even for those who have access to an automobile, the cost of gas is an additional out-of-pocket expense attached to a specialist visit in the city. The hardship falls on families, too, when they have to travel to Buffalo or Rochester to visit their loved ones in the hospital.

The result is that patients often don't go for primary care, for well visits, for follow-ups or work with therapists. Part of the issue with primary care "no-shows" is transportation. As one interviewee said, "middle class people who have to wait to see the doctor are annoyed. For the person who took three buses just to get there, it's disrespectful."

Primary care no-shows

Patients making appointments with primary care providers and failing to arrive is a pervasive problem in health care in the region. Rates of 25 or 35 percent no-shows are not uncommon across a range of primary care sites. At one OB/GYN clinic, no-shows account for 40 percent of all appointments.

Some have attempted to address the problem by reserving “sick slots” in the schedule for more urgent cases or by offering an early morning walk-in opportunity for people who have gotten sick overnight. Other providers simply work to squeeze people in when they make a late appointment, show up without an appointment or arrive late. Some have experimented with evening and Saturday hours. The Towne Gardens primary care clinic on Buffalo’s East Side is first-come, first-served.

These approaches haven’t necessarily solved the problem. People still face the barriers of transportation, work schedules and family obligations. And then there’s waiting.

Myron Glick at Jericho Road boasts a no-show rate under 10 percent. He says the secret is in how patients get treated when they come to the clinic.

“We see them on time, we treat them well, we show them respect and they’ll keep coming back.”

Maternal health

Several informants also made a connection between poverty and maternal health. Poor teen-agers are more likely to become teen-age mothers. Teen mothers, in turn are more likely to give birth before full term resulting in very costly post-natal care. Rates of infant mortality and maternal mortality are also higher among the poor. Teen mothers are also more likely to interrupt schooling, lack employment skills and fall into – or perpetuate – a cycle of dependency.

“It sentences these families to a life term of poverty,” Vanessa Barnabei, UB Chair of Obstetrics and Gynecology, said. More than that, it is not uncommon for issues such as obesity, drug addiction and mental illness to overlap with teen pregnancy. Rates of teenage pregnancy are high throughout the region. The rate of teen pregnancy in Chautauqua County is two and a half times the statewide average.

Non-compliance

There is great frustration on the part of providers for all the things patients fail to do. They don’t take their medications. They don’t listen to entreaties to quit smoking or eat a healthier diet. They don’t show up for well visits. They are no-shows for any kind of appointment (see “no shows” below). They don’t follow care plans. Sometimes it gets specific as with care-givers too busy to supervise administration of albuterol to childhood asthma sufferers. Providers give advice on wellness and prevention “but they aren’t buying it.” Patients often present their symptoms late in the process out of fear of what they might learn.

Some providers also understand that patients have their reasons, too, for non-compliance. Changing medications may mean an additional co-pay or other out-of-pocket cost. Being referred to a specialist may involve still another co-pay or an expensive cab ride or time off from work.

Sometimes the failures are very costly. One clinic diagnosed a woman with hepatitis C and administered the very expensive course of medications to cure the disease only to have the woman get re-infected in a very short time.

Another major challenge providers face is working with populations where health literacy is low. They can do wellness education “if we can get them to come.” But they start with low levels of educational attainment. Language barriers – not just Spanish anymore but Burmese, Karen, Somali, Nepali, Arabic and others – make transmission of health

Community partnerships

Organizations outside the realm of health care offer some capacity to deal with health issues, interview subjects suggested. Churches, schools, community organizations and others might team up with health care providers to provide health education and information, to host screening events, or to address some of the structural issues underlying community health status.

The Healthy Livable Communities Consortium in the Southern Tier is working in this way to promote food access and recreational opportunities. Primary care practices in Buffalo are teaming community health workers with church-based ambassadors to improve connections between providers and patients. Schools are providing – or could provide – sex education and access to contraception to prevent teen pregnancy and the spread of STDs.

Intensive case management

An important factor in problems of preventable ED visits, avoidable in-patient utilization and preventable re-admissions is the lack of coordination among providers to make sure patients connect with the next step in their treatment process. Interviewees identified a number of challenges in this regard, but also some steps forward in implementing forms of intensive case management and population management.

It is suggested by some as an “underutilized” approach. Provide a continuum of care. Hospital Health Home is one version being implemented. Patient Centered Medical Home is another for the primary care setting. Organizations like Family Health Medical Services in Chautauqua County has hired now a third care manager. The Resource Center is so committed to the process they have hired ten care managers that are so far unfunded.

In the primary care setting, a number of practitioners are working to get ahead of the curve by instituting their own systems. Urban Family Medicine, led by Raul Vazquez, has applied to be an Accountable Care Organization and is combining high technology, aggressive follow-up, in-house transportation service and internalized risk management to deal with an inner-city population.

Jericho Road Community Health Center, a certified PCMH, runs the “Priscilla Project” which targets young immigrant and refugee women who are pregnant to make sure they can navigate the health care system at a crucial time in their lives. Case workers also make sure they can link to social services and other supports.

Not every provider is going to take to the technology like Vazquez, but with the appropriate assistance, it can be integrated in each practice.

Some are leery of implementation of one-size-fits-all solutions to population management. Glick at Jericho Road argues that every population needs a different design. His west-side clinic population is not an anomaly relative to a normal system. Patients in Amherst are different, too. Michael Aronica at Elmwood Health Center calls for “systems designed for us by us.”

It’s not just about managed costs to the insurance company; it’s also about managed care for the patient.

These approaches are particularly important with medically complex cases where patients exhibit multiple co-morbidities. Sometimes medical needs overlap with mental health needs. Other times the profoundly developmentally disabled feature medically complex cases. The ACT program – Assertive Community Treatment – teams social workers, psychiatrists and primary care providers to go out and find their patients on the street – individuals who are often part of the “frequent flyers” in hospital emergency rooms.

Part of the process is just making sure that appropriate follow-up care is part of the discharge planning process. WCA Hospital in Jamestown, the Catholic Health System, among others have care managers to call back, arrange the next level of care, make sure prescriptions are filled.

Even programs of smoking cessation need a coordinative structure. On the NYS Quit Line counselors call would-be quitters back to see how they’re doing. They recognize that it typically takes multiple attempts to finally quit and they offer new help when it’s available.

Impacts of the reimbursement system

Many providers struggle with the current system of Medicaid reimbursement. For the most part, the shift of Medicaid from direct fee-for-service reimbursement to Medicaid managed care is complete. Enhanced reimbursement rates made it very attractive for providers to sell the change to their patients. But there are a number of other vexing issues.

Overall, reimbursement rates under Medicaid are so low that private providers need to limit the proportion of their patients that are insured under Medicaid and, of course, some refuse to take Medicaid patients at all. Gorman in Niagara Falls points out that Medicaid reimbursement for urgent care is so low that a practice likely to attract a large proportion of Medicaid patients – like one in his city – is unlikely to be established, let alone survive. An urgent care center is much more likely to open in an affluent suburb of Buffalo where employer-insured patients working to avoid an ER co-pay are happy to go.

On the flip side, Medicaid patients have no incentive to avoid the emergency room – they’ll get care – and no alternative in the urgent care realm for reasons already mentioned. Likewise, Medicaid members have no disincentive not to break primary care appointments. There’s no penalty for not showing up.

Meanwhile, Medicaid may refuse permission to admit certain patients from ED to acute care. But when patients are intoxicated in one form or another or discharging a patient would put them in danger, hospitals admit them for “observation,” but at a much lower rate of reimbursement.

Some providers seem to resent the Medicaid population. They describe them as more demanding, carrying a sense of entitlement, less willing to take care of themselves and less responsible. But providers from the world of the Federally Qualified Health Center have a more sympathetic view. They’re not freeloaders one FQHC manager said. They are the working poor trying to keep their families in health care. “They’re strivers.”

The resentment of Medicaid patients may extend to the FQHCs that serve them. Private practice providers don’t get the operating subsidy or the enhanced reimbursement rates that the FQHCs get. One doctor referred to them as “mascots” of the Federal government. Those who provide care to the Medicaid population understand the feeling. But they say “we’re the only ones who are going to love them.”

Meanwhile, providers are aware that they are all heading toward a system of value based reimbursement in which systems will assume the risk of providing care for individuals on a capitation basis rather than fee-for-service.

Providers are more generally frustrated with the amount of work they do that is not directly related to caring for patients such as time on the phone to secure pre-authorization of services to the insured and other system paperwork. They have invested a lot of time in the implementation of electronic medical records to meet the federal “meaningful use” standards and further labor-intensive changes lie ahead.

Mental and behavioral health

A wide range of providers describe the needs for mental health care and behavioral health care as exceeding the current capacity of the system. Overall, the demand seems to be rising while the supply can’t keep up. As one provider put it, “there is nothing to stem the tide of need.”

On the mental health side, providers from Olean to Orleans County report lots of depression, lots of anxiety, and lots of bi-polar disorder. Statistics show the communities at the center of the region somewhat better served. But in outlying areas the supply of providers and the barriers to care are significant.

Some of the barriers are procedural. Patients must meet a standard of medical necessity (“harm to self or others”) that some cannot satisfy, as well as multiple and redundant evaluations and approval from insurance companies. “There are beds,” Andy O’Brien at WCA Hospital in Jamestown says, but the system is so difficult and user unfriendly it may seem to some as if there are no beds.

Providers around the region have felt the ripple effect of the closure of a number of psychiatric beds at Buffalo General Hospital. Some patients ended up in psych beds in Niagara Falls instead.

The nexus between mental health and physical well-being and social stability is strong. Those with untreated mental illness are ill-equipped to cope with their physical health, disinclined to cooperate with medical providers.

“Without proper mental health care,” said one provider, “everything else is irrelevant.”

On the behavioral health side there is a similar picture. Alcohol and substance abuse are major problems. Referral to substance abuse providers is poor. Some waiting lists for out-patient treatment are 48 months long. In-patient treatment for drugs and alcohol are not reimbursed by some insurers.

For both mental and behavioral health the lack of providers or the likelihood of long waits to get a patient into treatment leads primary care providers to direct treatment themselves. This might get some help to patients quicker but it also limits the long-term effectiveness of treatment, providers acknowledge.

The impact on emergency department volumes can be significant. Drug and alcohol-related ER visits are a big part of the patient load and one element of the “frequent flyer” population. Gorman in Niagara Falls noted one case where a single person had visited their ED more than a hundred times over several years without getting connected to treatment that dealt with his problems.

There are some bright spots. Paul Updike is a primary care physician in the Catholic Health System who specializes in addiction treatment. He argues that in-patient treatment for opioid addiction is almost universally ineffective because patients more than anything else need to learn to live without drugs at home, not in controlled therapeutic settings. Relapse is common. Instead Updike dispenses Suboxone at his clinics, manages patients’ medical care, as well, and sees people get better. The problem is that the persistent chronicity of drug addiction requires long-term care. State regulations limit the number of patients he can treat so there are a lot of people who need treatment but can’t get it.

Provider shortages

Interview subjects described provider shortages as serious in many locations for both specialists and primary care providers. The issue for specialists is straightforward. They are in relatively good supply at the core of the region – in Buffalo – but scarce around the periphery. In Niagara County providers report the absence of specialists in neurosurgery, endocrinology and rheumatology, to name a few. In places like Cuba, seeing a specialist often means going to Buffalo.

In Wyoming County the public health system has made a concerted effort to attract a range of new specialists. But Steve Treutline, the Chief Medical Officer at Wyoming County Community Hospital, is still the only obstetrician in Wyoming County. In the Southern Tier, the Foothills Medical Group has a complement of specialists affiliated with their system. But some specialties are offered only in Buffalo or on a circuit-rider basis by physicians headquartered in Buffalo.

The shortage of primary care providers has an even broader impact. If primary and preventive care is the key to improving the health care system overall then current incentives are upside down, said William Mills, Chief Medical Officer at Olean General Hospital. The greatest financial incentives are for “procedural” practitioners – those who might perform a particular procedure or surgery repetitively – and against “cognitive” practitioners – those whose work requires evaluating and treating the whole patient.

If primary care providers are at the bottom of the pay scale for MDs they also face levels of responsibility and demands on their time after hours that the orthopedic surgeon or dermatologist typically does not. Moreover, typical compensation for primary care providers in Western New York is significantly below the national market average.

“Primary care providers aren’t in it for the money,” one interviewee said, but the rewards for pursuing a specialty are much greater. And it’s increasingly common for mid-level practitioners – physician assistants and nurse practitioners – to “work to top of license,” putting more pressure on physician pay.

The challenges of recruiting and retaining primary care providers in rural settings are even greater. Often there is family resistance to a physician locating outside of a metropolitan hub. Turnover among primary care providers is relatively high.

This is a partial, interpretive and frankly impressionistic summary of an extensive body of interviews. But generally speaking it reflects and also contextualizes the full range of data sources used to compile this community needs assessment.

2. Demographics

It has been said that “demographics is destiny.” It may be. But certainly the composition of a population has a lot to do with the prospects for health among those same people.

The community needs assessment works on an assumption that the age, race and ethnicity, socio-economic standing, educational attainment, family composition and access to transportation of people will say a lot about what the health needs of those people are likely to be. Some people are more vulnerable than others depending on all of these factors. Those vulnerabilities, in turn, help shape the need for health care services, especially for Medicaid.

The analysis here compares each county, first with the other seven counties in the Western New York region, and then against other counties of similar characteristics across Upstate New York. (See the discussion of Eberts Codes in Section 4 of this report). It is useful to know how a county ranks on any given variable against other counties in the region. But it is even more telling to combine that comparison with one between counties of similar urban, suburban or rural composition.

The numbers in the chart below reflect the percentile ranking of each county within each category for each variable. The lower the number, the lower the ranking. The cells shaded green indicate a higher or better ranking. The red cells indicate a lower or more negative ranking. When both regional and statewide rankings are low there is clearly cause for concern.

Overall, it is possible to say that Western New York has an unusually high proportion of people without access to an automobile, a relatively high population of older people, relatively more people in or near poverty, more single parent households and a higher proportion of African-American residents.

The region’s carlessness is concentrated in Erie County and especially in the cities of Buffalo and Lackawanna. Indeed, Erie County ranks last among upstate metropolitan regions for households lacking access to a motor vehicle. Chautauqua County also has a relatively high rate of households without a car. Obviously, being without a car in a region that is decidedly not “transit-rich” is a barrier to access to health care and a range of community supports.

Western New York is also a rapidly aging region. Erie, Niagara and Chautauqua counties all have especially high proportions of individuals over the age of 65 – a population with evidently greater needs for health care than other age-groups.

Households that are headed by a single parent also tend to have greater needs for health care than two-parent families. The region ranks below average on this measure with Orleans County at the very end of the line – last in the region and last among similar counties across New York. Erie, Chautauqua and Niagara all rank below the middle for single parent heads of household.

The region has a relatively high proportion of African-American residents, another indicator of health vulnerability. The largest proportion and the largest number of African-Americans by far is in Erie County with Niagara County a distant second. Orleans and Wyoming counties have small African-American populations – but rank relatively high for the proportion of African-Americans living there.

Finally, the region ranks below average for the proportion of persons living at or below 200 percent of the federal poverty limit. Erie and Niagara counties rank below most other upstate metropolitan counties on this measure. But the southern tier counties of Chautauqua, Cattaraugus and Allegany counties ranked even lower – both within the region and against their kindred counties.

A few other “hot spots” – counties where certain indicators are decidedly negative even when the regional picture is not – deserve mention.

While Erie County has the largest Latino or Hispanic population by far, Chautauqua County has a higher proportion of Latinos and Orleans County almost as large a share. To the extent that the Latino population is more vulnerable, this increases the overall health need in those counties.

Several counties have relatively high proportions of non-English speakers, including Erie, Chautauqua and Cattaraugus – a particular barrier for individuals in obtaining health care services.

Finally, Allegany and Orleans counties have particularly high proportions of women aged 15 to 44 years. Women of child-bearing age can be expected to translate into relatively higher needs for health care services.

African American persons

As a population segment that has traditionally experienced barriers to high-performing schools, safe neighborhoods, healthy food, employment and more, African Americans account for 10 percent of the region’s population or 148,931 individuals altogether.

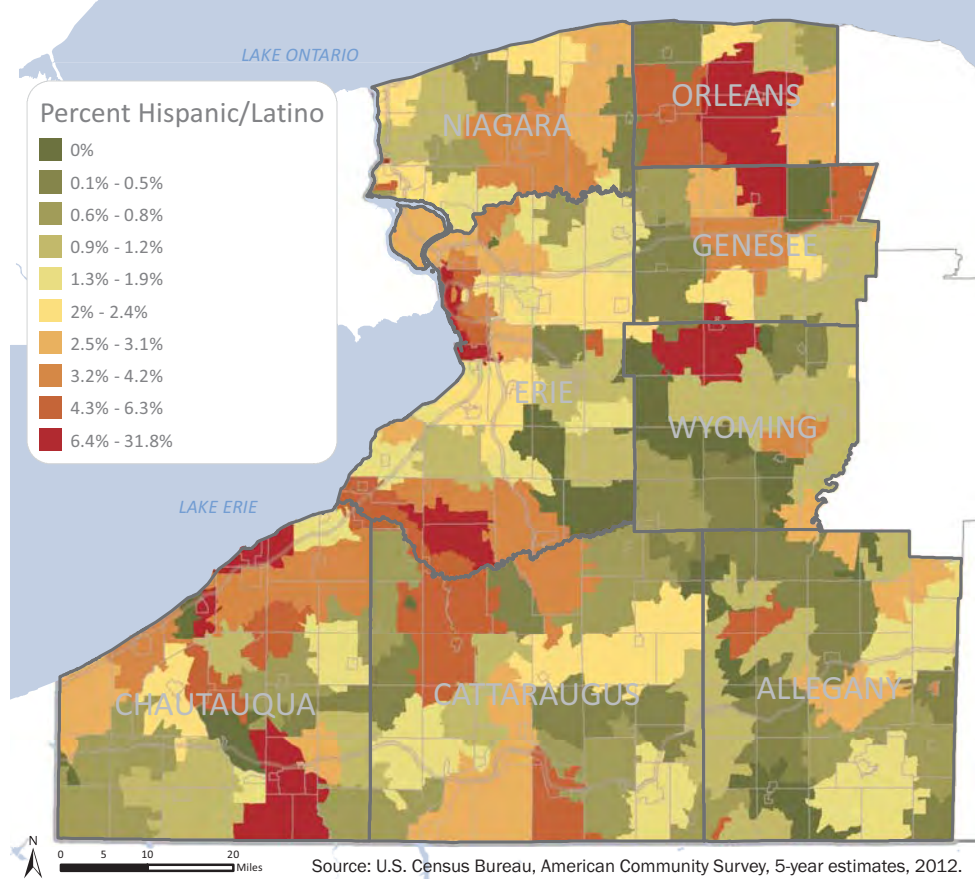

Four out of five African Americans – more than 122,000 – live in Erie County, with highest concentrations in the City of Buffalo. African Americans, in fact, account for up to nearly 80% of residents in selected Zip Codes in Buffalo and Niagara Falls.

While absolute population numbers are lower elsewhere outside the metro core, higher percentages of African Americans live in more rural areas, particularly Attica (in Wyoming County), Gowanda (spanning Erie and Cattaraugus Counties) and Albion (in Orleans County).

Persons of Hispanic/Latino heritage

Individuals of Hispanic and Latino ethnicity have been described as one of the fastest growing population segments in America and the region. Yet this is a population segment that sometimes experiences language, work and other barriers that bear on health, health care access and Medicaid use. More than 61,600 residents in WNY – 4 percent of the total – are Hispanic/Latino. Two-thirds live in Erie County. Proportions are highest on Buffalo’s west side and in rural southern Erie County, which may draw a proportion of migrant workers. Lack of English fluency is a key barrier to health care and other wellness supports for this population.

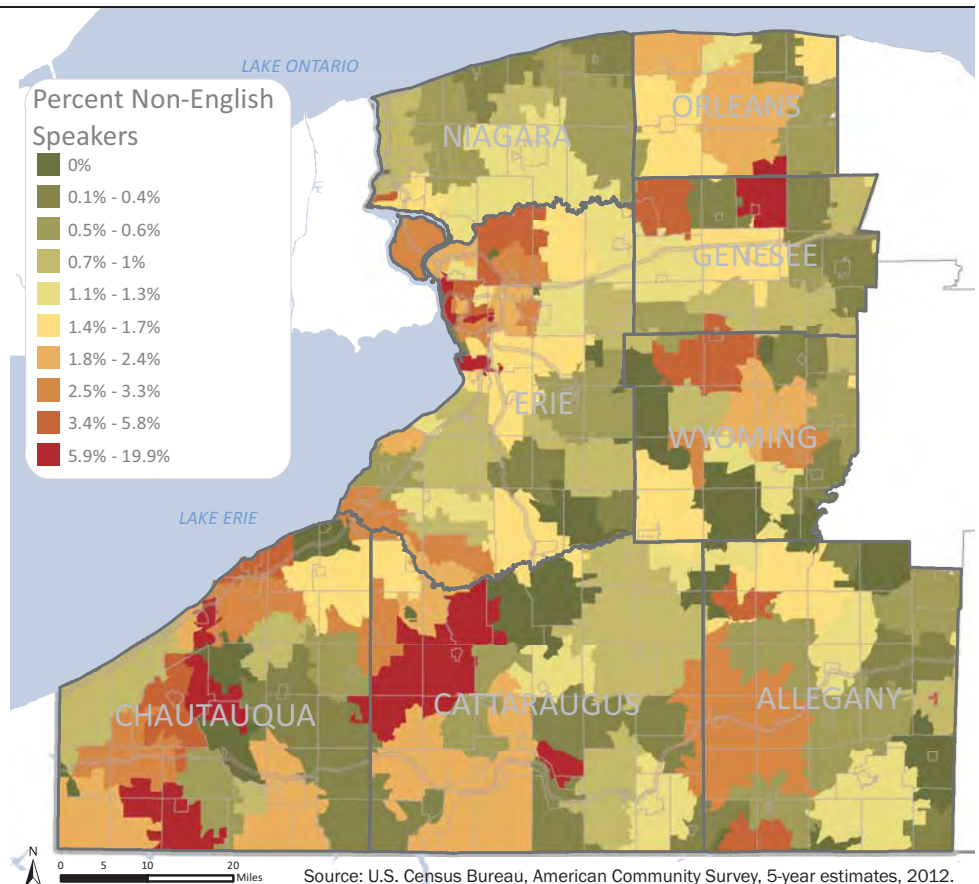

Hispanic/Latino individuals outnumber African Americans in several rural counties, including Allegany, Cattaraugus, Chautauqua and Genesee. In these areas, Hispanic/Latino individuals account for above-average percentages of the overall population, nearing a third in selected ZIP Codes. Contributing to this are employment opportunities on farms for migrant and seasonal workers.

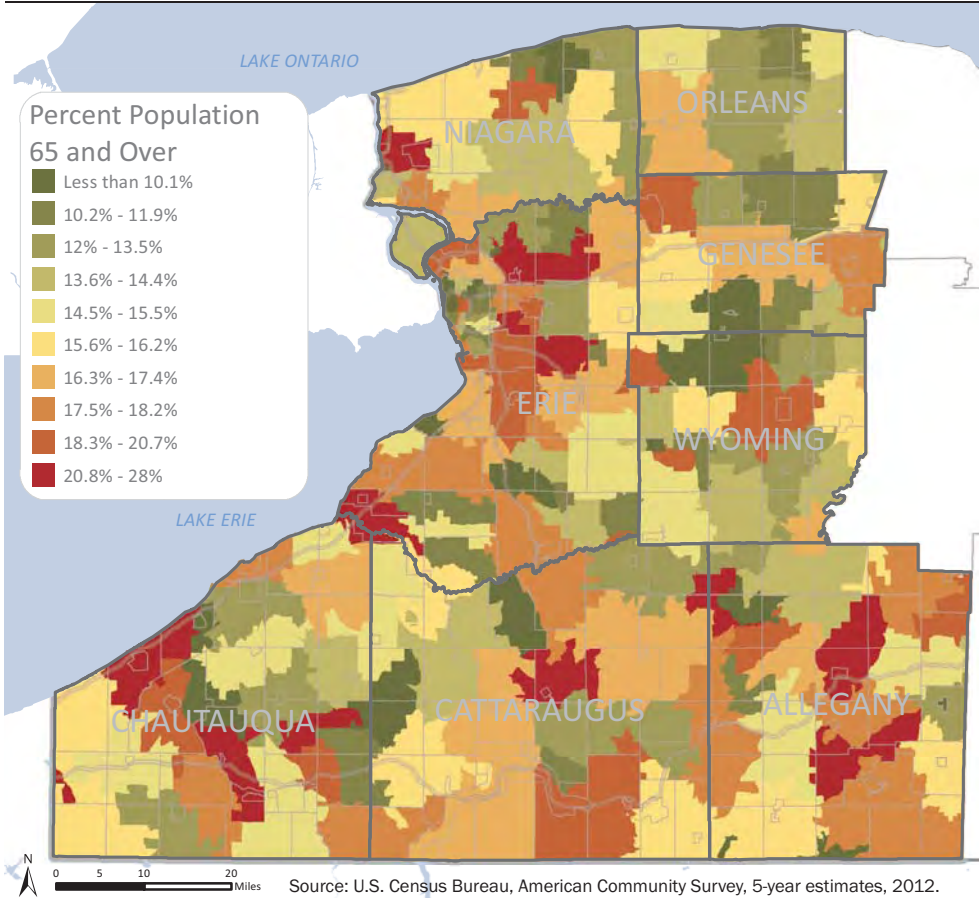

English fluency

Limited fluency in English can directly affect a population’s ability to access health care and other resources that bear on health. It also limits opportunities for good-paying jobs with health benefits. In Western New York, 40,155 individuals ages 5 and up speak English less than well. This is 3 percent of the population, or about 1 out of 35 individuals. Three out of four (74 percent) live in Erie County, primarily on the West Side of the City of Buffalo where refugees and immigrants are concentrated, as well as near the University at Buffalo, where international students reflect about 20 percent of total student enrollment.

While relatively fewer non-English speakers live in more rural areas of Western New York, geographic distance from people and services create additional barriers for the 10,369 who do. Percentages are proportionally high in portions of Chautauqua and Cattaraugus Counties as well as northern portions of Genesee County. Spanish-speaking migrant populations in these more rural areas may contribute.

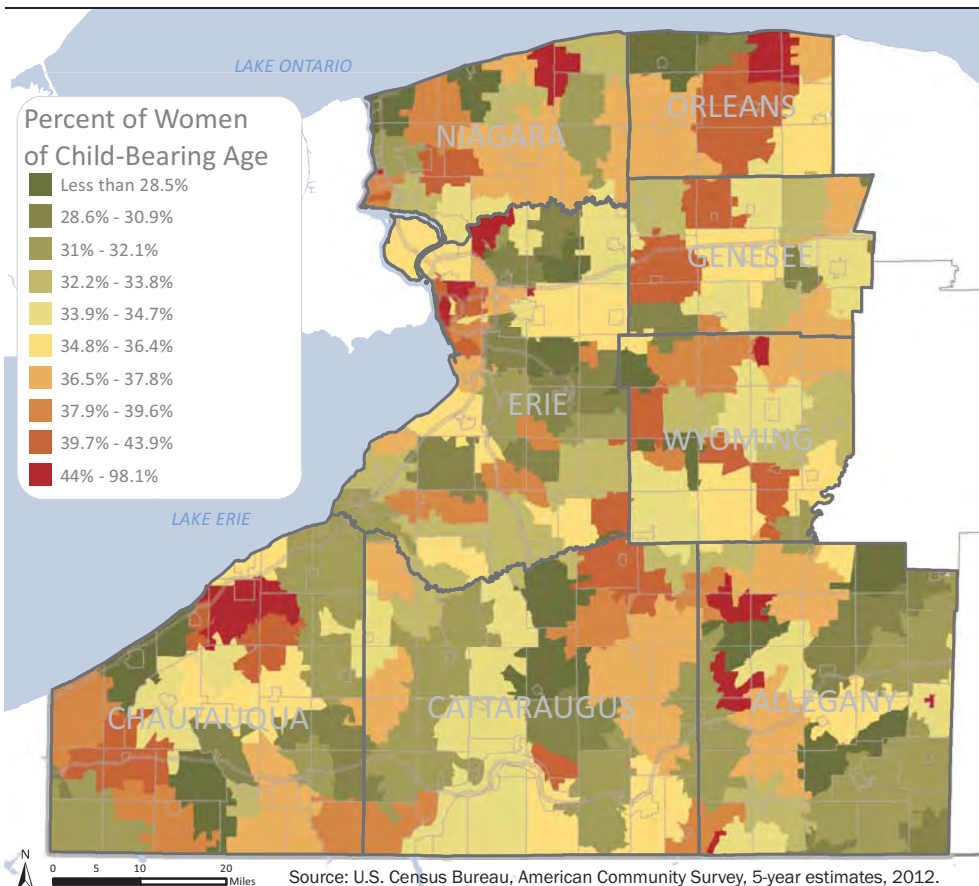

Older adults

Disease and disability become more prevalent during the later decades of life, directly bearing on health care need and consumption. Poor health can also create barriers to health care. Almost one out of six individuals across the region – about 243,400 in all – are age 65 and up. This percentage is higher than in almost every other region of the state, outside NYC.

While the majority (59%) of seniors in Western New York live in Erie County, proportions of seniors are highest not in the city but in inner ring suburbs like Amherst, Cheektowaga and West Seneca. In some Zip Codes, up to one out of four individuals is age 65 or older.

Comparatively high proportions of seniors also live in Niagara, Chautauqua, and Genesee Counties. In each of these areas, the countywide percentage of seniors is high regionally and large compared to what exists in comparable counties statewide.

Women of child-bearing age

An indicator of the health care and supports needed for pregnant women, infants and children, nearly 293,000 women of child-bearing age (15 to 44) live in the region. In Erie and Niagara Counties where three-quarters are concentrated, proportions are relatively higher near urban areas like Buffalo, Niagara Falls and Lockport. In selected ZIP Codes nearly half or more of all women are between the ages of 15 and 44.

While absolute numbers are comparatively lower in rural counties of the region, Orleans and Allegany Counties have notably higher proportions of women of child-bearing age than the other six counties. Proportions are also higher here than in most, if not all, comparable counties across the state. Indeed, Allegany County has the highest percentage of women of child-bearing age of all counties in the region and of all comparable counties statewide.

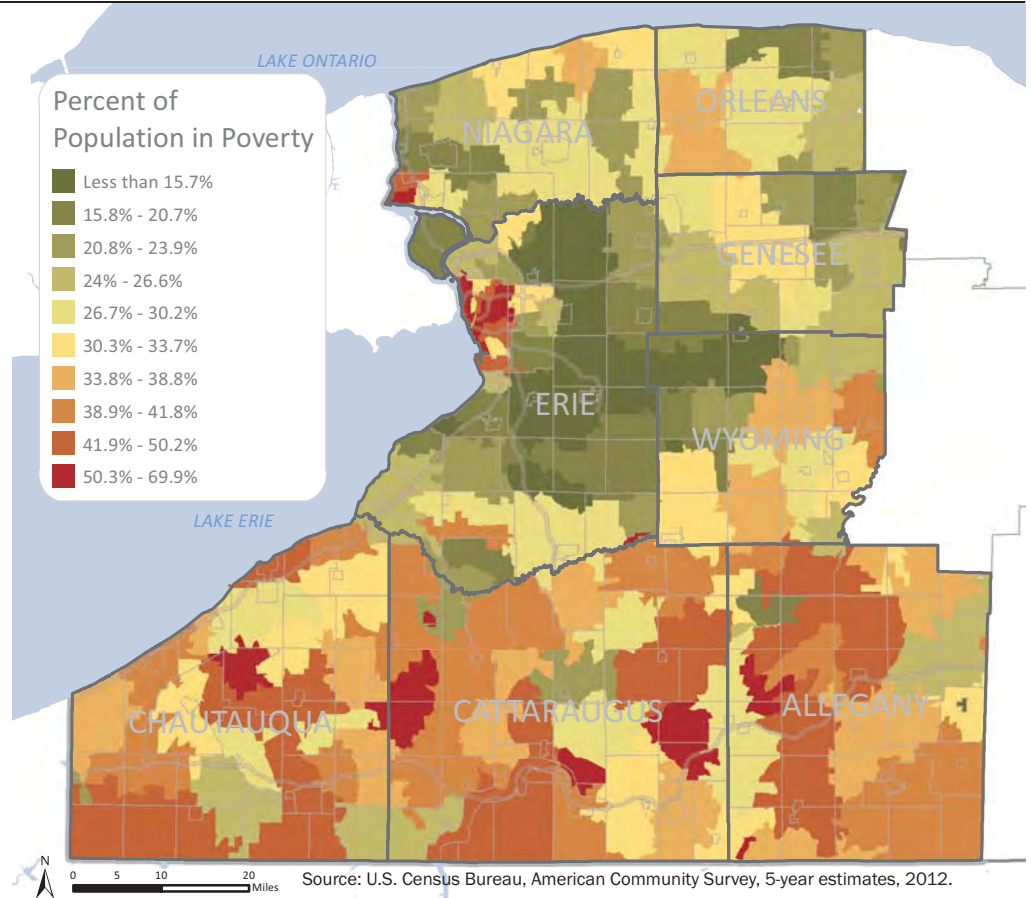

Poverty

Those living in or near poverty are likely to qualify for coverage under Medicaid. Poverty status also impacts financial capacity to access health-promoting resources – vehicles, computers, healthy foods, preventive care co-pays and more.

Nearly a half million individuals in the region—478,765—live in or near poverty, with incomes under 200 percent of the federal poverty level. This threshold is slightly above Medicaid’s income limit, which stands at 133 percent of the federal poverty level.

The economically vulnerable are concentrated in Erie and Niagara Counties, where seven out of 10 live, primarily in Buffalo and Niagara Falls where highest poverty percentages are reported.

Need is also visibly pronounced in Chautauqua, Cattaraugus and Allegany Counties, where, overall, close to 40 percent are in and near poverty.

High school dropouts

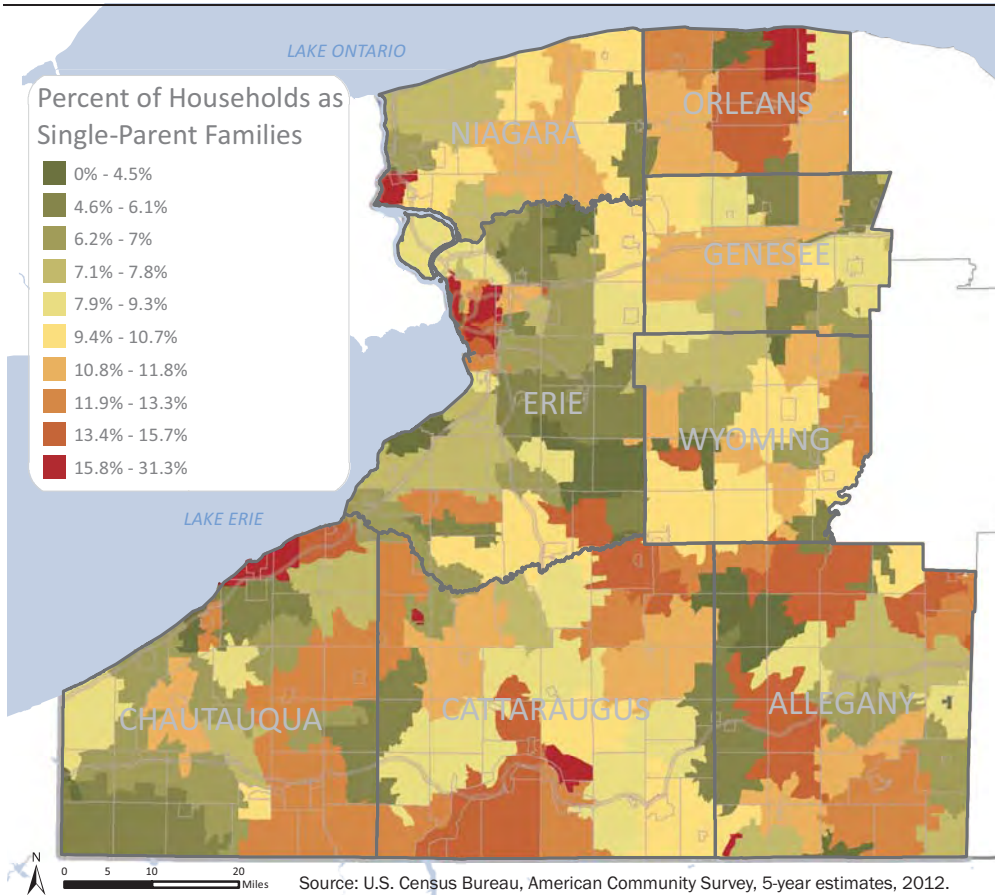

Education is linked to good health, as limited education creates barriers to jobs, higher incomes, quality neighborhoods, health literacy and more. Nearly 116,000 adults in WNY do not have a high school diploma. This is one out of nine. Yet proportions run at least four times in some ZIP Codes run at least four times this rate.

More than half of those without a diploma live in Erie County, with high concentrations in Buffalo and the Towns of Brant and Collins near the county’s southwestern border. In selected ZIP Codes, up to 42 percent of adults lack a high school education.

In Niagara County, another 16,000 have no education beyond high school, with concentrations highest in Niagara Falls.

Outside the region’s metropolitan core, Chautauqua, Orleans and Wyoming Counties have high percentages of high-school drop-outs, both compared to other counties in the region and to comparable counties statewide.

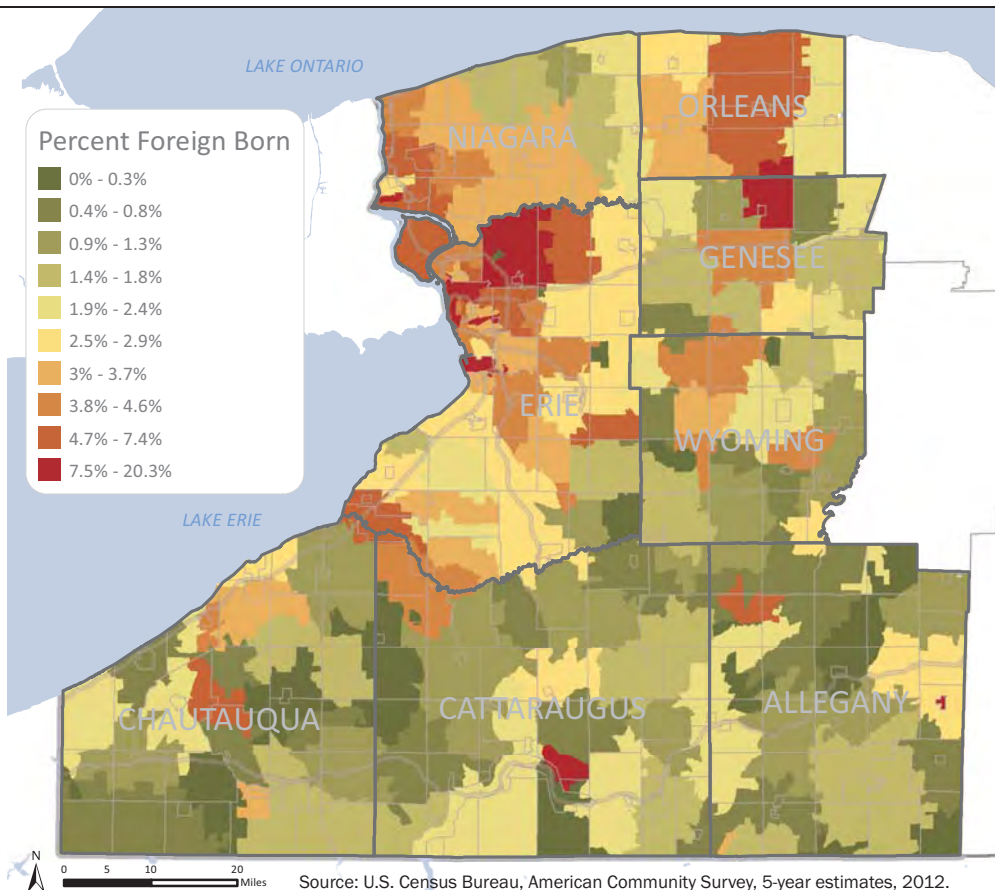

Single-parent families

With one parent and one income, single-parent families are more likely to be vulnerable. About one out of nine households in the region are single-parent households, having one or more children under age 18 and only one parent present. This represents nearly 69,000 households altogether and up to one out of three households in selected ZIP Codes.

Numbers are highest in Erie and Niagara Counties, where three out of four single-parent households reside, concentrated in Buffalo and Niagara Falls.

Proportions are also high throughout Orleans County, which has a higher percentage of single-parent households than the other seven counties. Proportions here are also higher than in comparable counties statewide. High proportions of vulnerable families are also found in Chautauqua County, particularly in the Fredonia/Dunkirk area.

Foreign-born persons

Those born outside of the country often experience a sundry of challenges – cultural, language, informational and other – to income, health care and supports. One out of twenty persons across the region was born in a foreign country. This is more than 75,700 individuals across Western New York. The large majority of foreign-born residents – 76 percent of the total – live in Erie County, primarily in the City of Buffalo and suburbs to the north. In some ZIP Codes, up to one in five are foreign born. More than 8,500 foreign-born live in Niagara County, with concentrations highest in and around Niagara Falls.

In the region’s southern counties, the foreign born account for 2 percent or less of the total population, although a visibly high concentration exists in Cattaraugus County’s Salamanca area. In rural northeastern Orleans County, the percentage of foreign born is among the highest in WNY and higher than in most comparable counties statewide.

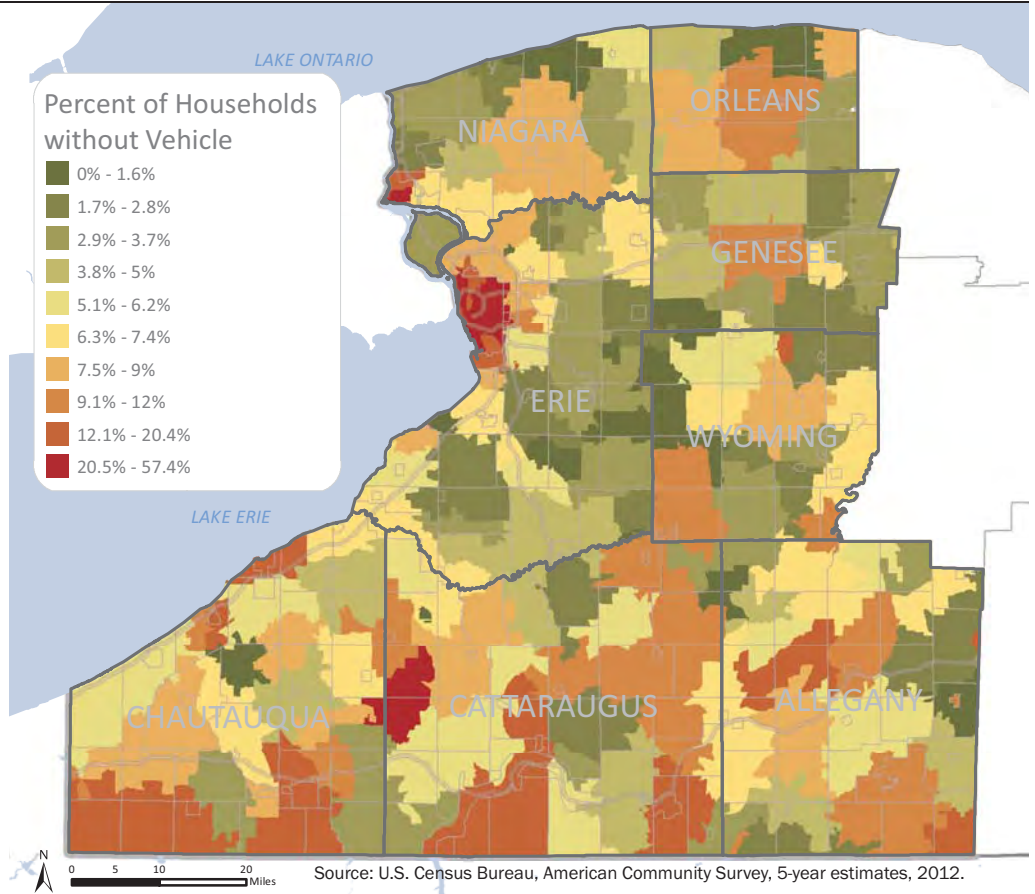

Households with no vehicle

In the absence of affordable, flexible and extensive public transit systems, those without a vehicle often experience barriers to jobs, higher education, healthcare and community supports.

About 74,400 households across WNY do not have a vehicle. Overall, this is about one out of eight that rely on alternative modes of traveling such as walking, biking, and public transit. This percentage is higher than in any other region statewide, outside of NYC.

Numbers and percentages are highest in Erie County, where 51,600 households, primarily in the City of Buffalo and inner-ring suburbs, lack a car. In some ZIP Codes, those who have access to a vehicle are actually in the minority. Another 8,700 in Niagara County live without a car, with concentrations highest in Niagara Falls.

Outside of these urban counties, about 14,100 households are living in more rural areas without a vehicle, with highest concentrations in the region's southern counties.

3. Community Structure

“Community structure” refers to those characteristics – not of people but of the physical and social environment – that shape health need in the region. The age of housing, the quality of water, access to food, the prevalence of violence and the conditions of work all help determine the health of the community, especially for people of lower income. The affluent can usually move to a better place or protect themselves against these hazards. Often the poor cannot.

Four aspects of the community landscape put residents in Western New York at a particular risk and disadvantage as compared to almost every other region in the state outside of New York City. Housing is older, access to healthy food is constrained, rates of violent crime are high, and the proportion of migrant workers in the population is relatively greater.

The most pressing of the four is violent crime, based on our standing against other regions. The region ranks last among all upstate regions for violent crimes per 100,000 population.

Violence in the cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls – reflected in the low rankings for Erie and Niagara Counties – contribute most to this finding. Yet the challenge isn’t an urban one alone. Rates of violence in all counties of the region except Allegany are higher than rates in the majority of comparable counties across New York.

Western New York also has a higher percentage of older housing than in almost every other upstate region. This analysis uses structures built prior to 1980 as a proxy for the presence of lead-based paint, asbestos and other residential health hazards. Even Allegany County, which has the newest housing stock of all eight WNY counties, ranks relatively poorly against other similar counties across the state. Meanwhile, Erie, Niagara, Orleans, Genesee and Chautauqua counties have only one out of five housing units built in the last 35 years.

The region also has higher proportions of persons engaged in migrant work than the large majority of regions statewide. Migrant workers are usually foreign-born individuals with limited education who are here to work on farms for the harvest season, usually for minimum wage. This kind of work is most prevalent in rural counties on the eastern border – Orleans, Genesee and Wyoming. Moreover, five out of the region’s eight counties have higher proportions of migrant workers than comparable counties statewide.

Food access is also more of a challenge in Western New York than in most upstate New York regions. The region has higher than average proportions of households where food access is compromised by distance to supermarkets and lack of access to transportation.

Vulnerable households are ones that are more than 10 miles away from a supermarket, or more than a half mile away, if they don’t have a vehicle. Counties with large urban and rural populations have the most pressing challenges in meeting food access needs, particularly Erie, Orleans, and Wyoming.

With the other community structure indicators, Western New York ranks near the top third or better, but shows some troubling rankings at the county level. For instance, the region has more faith-based organizations per 100,000 residents than two out of three other regions outside of New York City. These are organizations that oftentimes provide critical supports to parishioners and communities such as food pantries and youth programs. They also serve as trusted sources of word-of-mouth information for residents, connecting them to a broader array of services within the community.

However, faith-based organizations are not as prevalent in Erie, Allegany, and Orleans Counties as they are in similarly situated counties across New York State. Per capita, Erie County has the smallest number of these support organizations and fewer than half of all metropolitan counties. This increases the burden on not-for-profit organizations and governmental agencies in these areas and sometimes necessitates stronger information conduits to reach residents with information about services.

Overall, the region also performs comparatively well in terms of the percentage of households that rely on water from wells – usually associated with lower water quality – as their source of water. Only 17 percent of regions have a smaller percentage than we do in Western New York.

Yet this overall positive finding is not uniformly found across the region. Rather, Cattaraugus and Genesee Counties have high percentages of households relying on water wells as compared to other counties in the region and similarly situated rural counties across the state.

Older Housing

A total of 562,160 housing units in WNY were built prior to 1980, before the ban on asbestos (throughout the 1970s) and lead in paint (outlawed in 1977). Both materials can create serious health risks for home occupants.

Sixty percent of older homes are in Erie County. Highest concentrations exist in Buffalo and surrounding suburbs, where nine out of ten homes or more are older structures. Erie County's percentage of older homes is higher than any comparable county statewide.

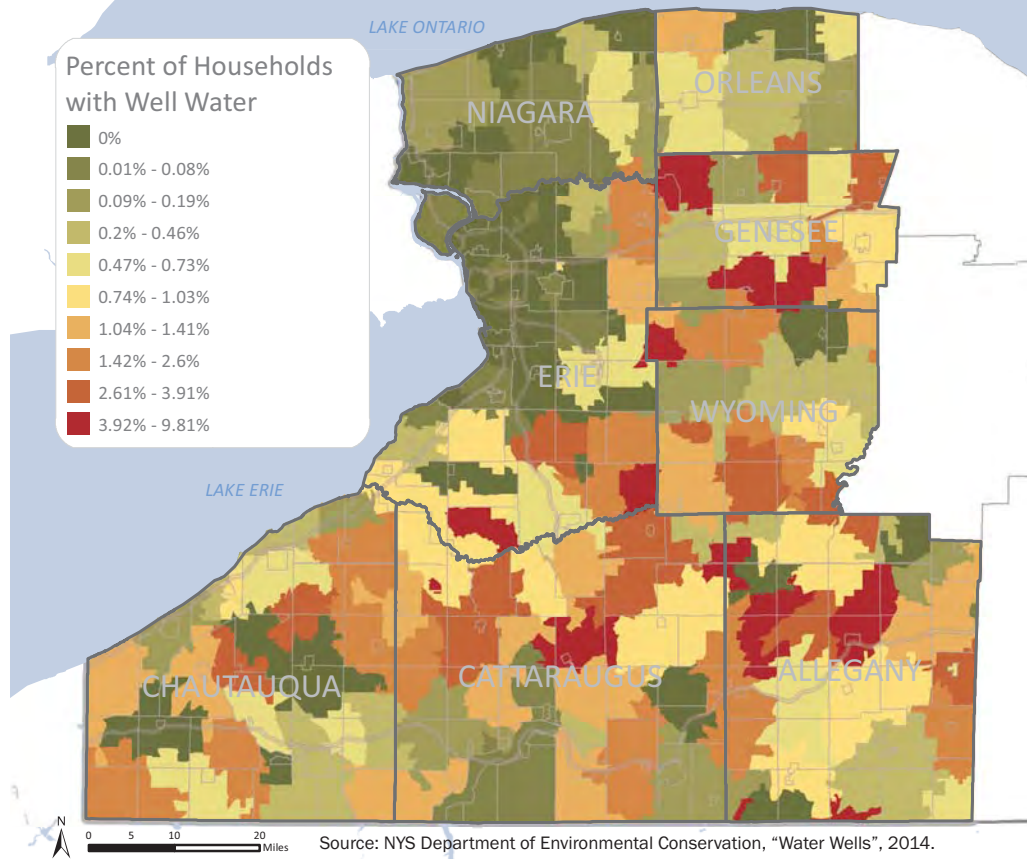

Hot spots of risk are also present in Niagara Falls, Eden/Evans (in southern Erie County), Oakfield (in Genesee County), the Jamestown area (in Chautauqua County), the Salamanca area (in Cattaraugus County) and the mid eastern area in Wyoming County. In some ZIP Codes in the City of Buffalo, Niagara Falls and Wyoming County, close to 100 percent of housing units were built before 1980.

Well Water

Wells are associated with lower water quality because of lack of fluoridation and treatment of potential contaminants by community systems. Nearly 2,000 households across the region rely on wells as their source of water. While this percentage stacks up favorably against other regions in the state, comparably high percentages are reported by some counties.

Households supplied by well water are mostly outside the metropolitan core. Two out of three are in one of the five mostly rural counties of Genesee, Wyoming, Allegany, Cattaraugus and Chautauqua. In Genesee and Cattaraugus, not only are proportions highest in the region but high compared to similar counties across New York State.

Hundreds of households relying on well water also live in southern Erie County. In some ZIP Codes across the region, nearly one out of ten households uses well water.

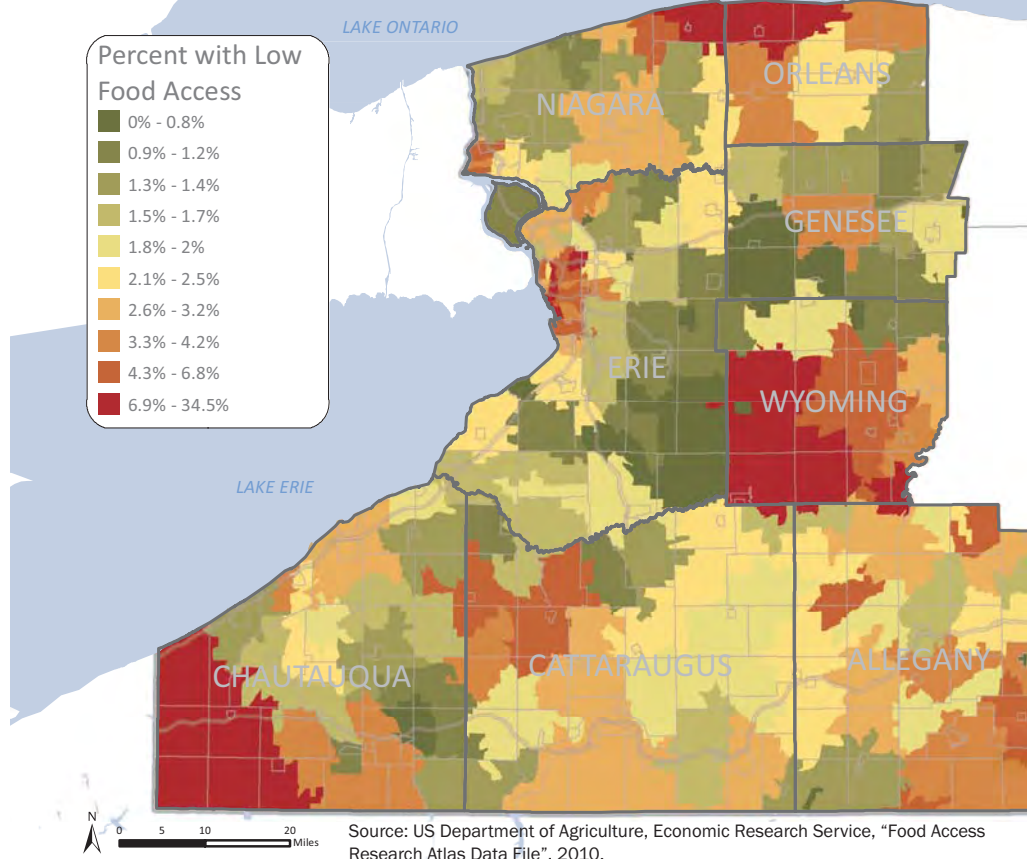

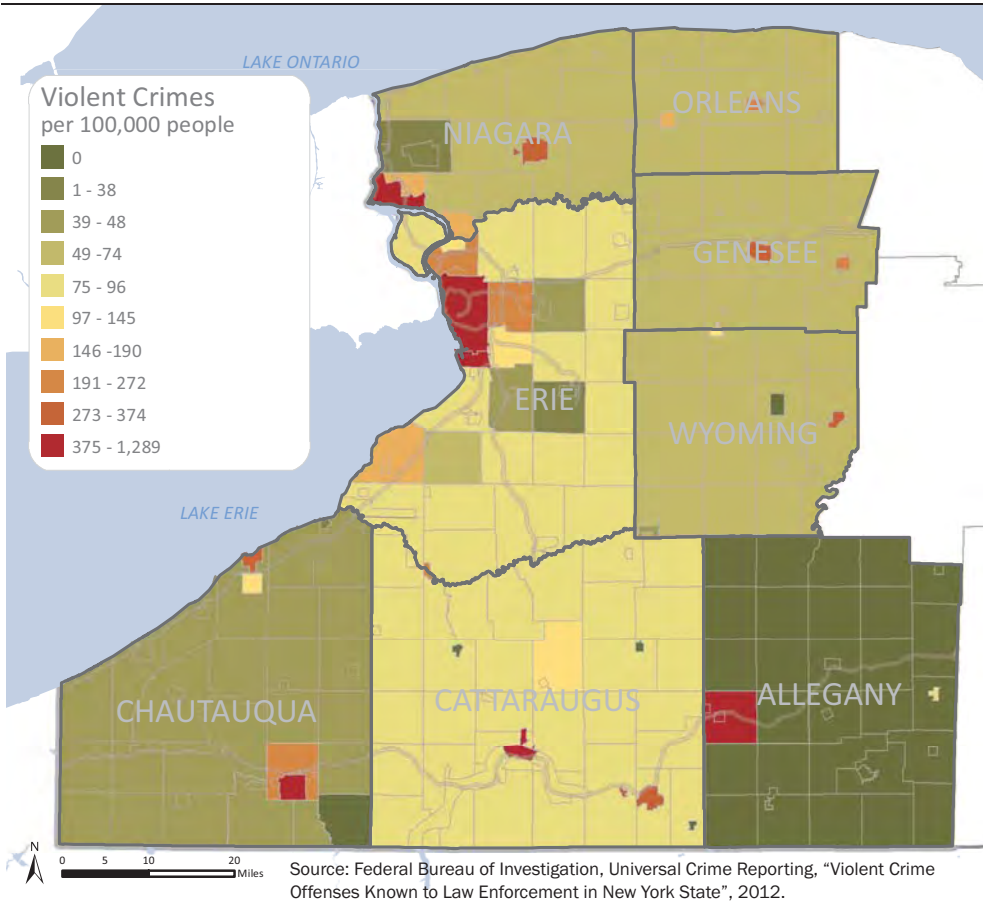

Food Access

Access to healthy and affordable food helps lay a foundation for good health. More than 46,200 households across the region have low access to food. These are households that are more than 10 miles from a supermarket or further than one half mile if they don't have access to a vehicle.

In the region's metropolitan counties, which account for 70 percent of households with barriers, access to supermarkets is most compromised in Buffalo and Niagara Falls, as well as in the rural northeastern corner of Niagara County. In selected ZIP Codes, up to a third of the population may not be able to get to a supermarket without traveling long distances by car or using alternative modes of transportation.

Access is also particularly low in Wyoming County, the region's least populous county, which has more households with low food access than in four out of the eight counties of the region.

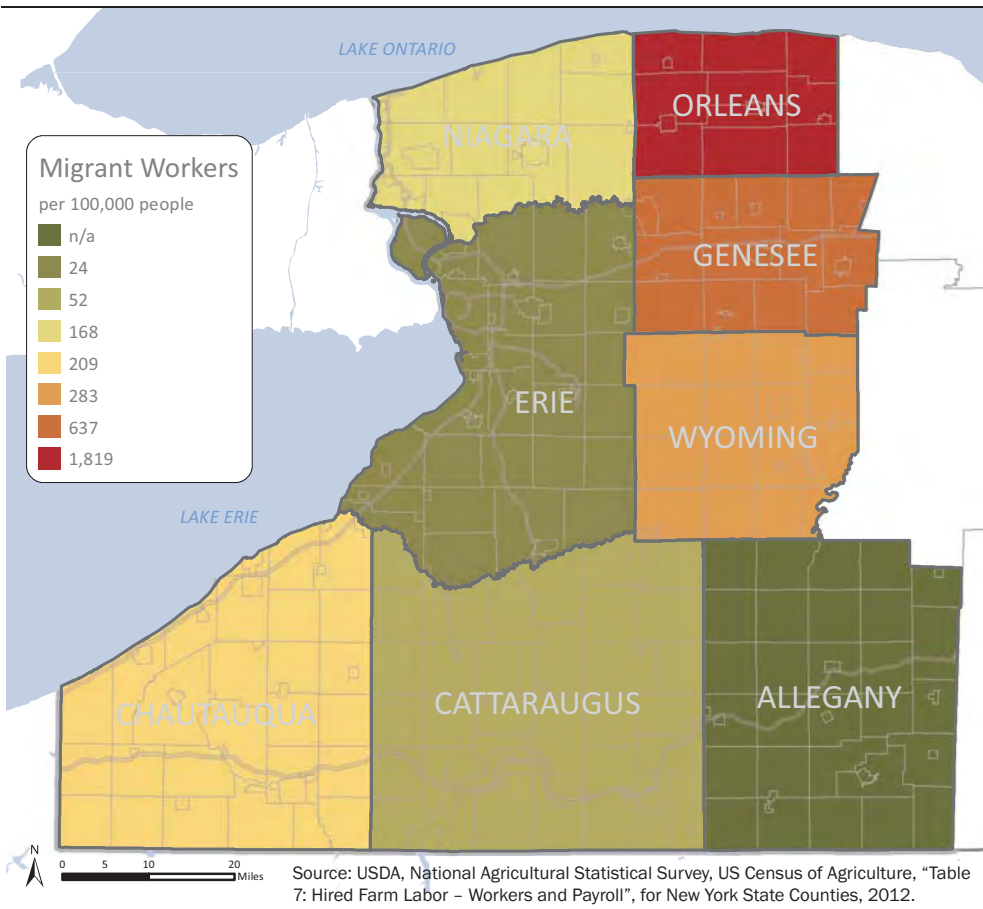

Violent Crime

Violent crime directly bears on health and health care through personal injury and psychological trauma. It also keeps people indoors, creating barriers to travel by foot and outdoor activity.

Nearly 5,600 violent crimes occurred in the region in 2012. Almost nine out of ten of these happened in Erie and Niagara Counties where rates of violent crime are significantly higher (by up to 26-fold) than in rural counties overall, many of which contain large areas patrolled by a county Sheriff's Office.

Hot spots of highest risk include Buffalo and Lackawanna (in Erie County), Niagara Falls (in Niagara County), Jamestown (in Chautauqua County) and Salamanca (in Cattaraugus County). Violent crime rates in Buffalo and Niagara Falls are among the highest in New York State, among areas with a populations of at least 14,000 or more.

Migrant Workers

One hundred and sixty-four farms across the region report use of migrant labor – nearly 2,200 migrant workers altogether, commonly foreign-born individuals here for the annual harvest season.

Numbers are highest in one of the region's most rural and remote counties, Orleans, where about 800 migrant workers find work. This is one out of three of the total and represents about 2 percent of the county's population. Migrant workers here likely contribute to county demographics showing high percentages of foreign-born, Hispanic/Latino individuals and those without a high school education.

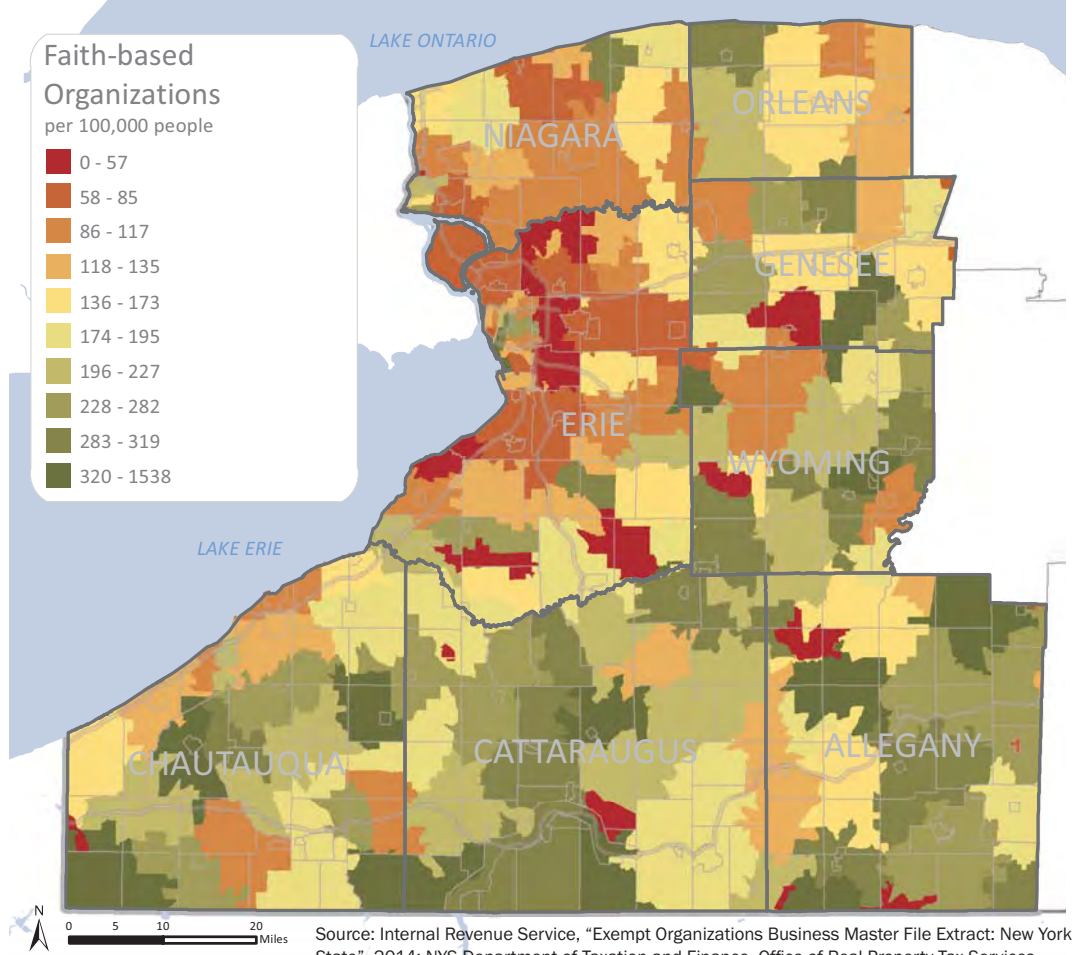

Rates are also comparatively high in Genesee and Wyoming Counties, where together, another 500 migrant workers are found. Nearly 600 migrant workers are in Niagara and Erie Counties, but here they represent relatively small percentages of the overall population.

Faith-based organizations

Nearly 2,000 faith-based organizations exist across the region. These are places of worship – churches, synagogues, mosques and temples – that often go beyond the spiritual to address health and social needs of congregations and broader communities. They also create hubs for information and service delivery

These community supports tend to exist in greater numbers, as a percentage of the overall population, in rural counties. In some ZIP Codes, there is close to one or more faith-based organizations for every 100 people.

Proportions are notably lower across Niagara and Erie Counties, with the exception of spots such as the East Side of Buffalo, parts of Niagara Falls, and the Lockport/Newfane area in Niagara County where faith based organizations figure more prominently in the community's structure.

4. Health Care Analytics

Overview

The community needs assessment used an index-based methodology to integrate and analyze quantitative data from a wide range of sources. This was intended to construct a comprehensive and consolidated method to understand information from disparate sources in a way to holistically assess health care need in Western New York. Toward that end, the analysis is based on five interrelated indices, each of which reflects a different aspect of health care need.

Index 1 – Demographics.

Index 1 brings together a range of variables, each of which is correlated with high need for health care services. Variables in Index 1 (detailed in Section 2 of this report) include the proportion of people in poverty (a key marker for vulnerability), the proportion of African Americans and Latinos in the community, non-English speakers and foreign born population (two indicators of the need for culturally-sensitive services), the numbers of elderly and women of child-bearing age, households that have no access to a car, adults without a high school diploma and single parent households.

Index 2 – Community Structure

Index 2 assembles variables that describe, not people, but the environments in which they live. These are also drivers as well as predictors of health care need. Variables in Index 2 (detailed in Section 3) include the proportion of houses built before 1980 as a proxy for lead based paint and other residential environmental hazards, persons with access to clean and fluoridated water, local crime rates as predictors of injury and stress-related illnesses, people with poor access to healthy food, and the percentage of migrant farm workers. The ratio of faith based organizations to population is included as a positive indicator of capacity to respond to health care needs.

Index 3–Systems Transformation (DSRIP Domain 2)

Index 3 contains “Prevention Quality Indicators” (PQI) as measures of system performance in the delivery of health care. These are metrics approved by the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) and are understood as indicators for the effectiveness of systems of care in treating ambulatory sensitive care conditions. These are measures that when appropriate care is provided, rates go down. When it is not provided, rates go up. A similar set of metrics for children – “Pediatric Prevention Quality Indicators” (PDI) – are also provided in Index 3. Both sets of measures are associated with DSRIP Domain 2, “Systems Transformation.”

Two other measures also contribute to our understanding of systems transformation: Potentially Preventable Emergency Room Visits and Potentially Preventable Hospital Readmissions. The effectiveness of health care systems is indicated both by the extent to which primary care can be delivered in primary care settings and the degree to which patients discharged from acute care settings can be connected securely to effective continuing care outside the hospital. Like PQI and PDI, these metrics are approved by CMS.

Index 4 – Clinical Outcomes (DSRIP Domain 3)

Index 4 agglomerates measures of quality of care in terms of the rates at which standard medical procedures or best practices are implemented in clinical settings. These are not indicators of population health but they are predictors of it because they represent what medical science considers appropriate screening, monitoring, medication, and other programs of care that will lead to more positive health outcomes. These indicators are also approved by CMS.

Index 5 – Population Health (DSRIP Domain 4)

Index 5 incorporates a wide range of variables that measure the health of the population in the region. These cover a range of categories, including measures of chronic disease, health status and disparities, promoting a healthy and safe environment, preventing HIV and other sexually transmitted or otherwise infectious diseases, promoting mental health and preventing drug abuse, and promoting maternal and infant health. These are the indicators – also CMS approved – that can help us know if we are “moving the needle” on health.

The CMS-approved metrics included in this assessment are those that were available primarily on the delivery system redesign incentive payment program website. Other data sets were examined but not included in this structured normative needs assessment methodology.

Methodology

The indices are based on the relative ranking of the Western New York region against other Upstate or non-New York City regions and the relative ranking of WNY counties, first against other counties in the region, then against counties of comparable structure across Upstate New York.

This makes it possible to apply a uniform methodology to the relative ranking of all counties and against all data variables. It also makes it possible to create composite measures that combine the rankings of the region and of counties in a way that is statistically consistent and show which areas are doing well and which are doing poorly on every measure and all measures.

The regional comparisons, obviously, make it possible to measure Western New York against all other Upstate regions on any of the metrics involved. New York City is excluded because its demographic and health care dynamics are so strikingly different from those in the rest of the state. When our regional ranking is at the bottom – in most of the tables that follow, the 0 percentile – we know we have a problem.

The county to county comparisons within Western New York allow us to understand the variations in performance across the region.

In comparing WNY counties against counties across the state, it doesn't make sense to compare an urban county with a rural county. The population and health care dynamics in each are very different. It makes more sense to make an "apples-to-apples" comparison, that is, between counties that are alike in structure.

Such a comparison is possible using the categories for New York State as identified in Eberts Codes. This scheme sorts 62 New York counties into six categories organized around their relative mix of urban, suburban and rural environments. The accompanying table shows the six categories and the counties in each one. In the analysis here a second comparison is made that shows the relative ranking for each WNY county on each metric against counties across the state in the same Eberts category. This comparable county comparison adjusts for variables that often influence health care statistics such as population density and proximity to urban centers with high levels of specialty care.

While a WNY county might perform relatively poorly on any given metric against the other counties in the region we might also see that it performs relatively well against similar counties in its Eberts Code category. When a county ranks well against WNY counties and against similar counties across the state, we can see that it is doing very well. Conversely, a county that ranks last in WNY and in its Eberts classification is doing very poorly indeed.

Western New York scored at or slightly below average on all five index values. The lowest or worst index score of 37 was shown in the population health category. The highest score of 50 was for the community structure index. Scores for demographics, system transformation, and clinical outcomes are all very similar and were 42 or 43.

From a comparative standpoint population health issues which are generally more long-standing, chronic and highly influenced by cultural patterns and attitudes proved to be most problematic in Western New York than other areas measured by the index.

Major Findings

Index 1 – Demographics (Score 43)

Ten metrics were studied in this index. Poor scores were the percent of the population over the age of 65 and the percent of households with no vehicles. Chautauqua and Niagara County were among the highest in the region and Erie and Chautauqua Counties had high rates of households with no vehicle available. The elderly consume healthcare services at extremely high rates and hence are in indication of high need for services. The percent of households with no vehicles is an indicator of potential problems in access to care due to the lack of private transportation.

Index 2 – Community Structure (Score 50)

This index contains six variables and Western New York compared poorly on two of those variables, the percent of housing built before 1980 and farms with migrant workers per 100,000 residents. Housing units were especially old in Erie and Chautauqua County and older housing units have a higher probability for environmental hazards such as lead based paint. High rates of farms with migrant workers were notable in Orleans and Wyoming counties and seasonal workers have extensive health care needs which are often unmet due to lack of income, health care insurance and cultural barriers such as language and health literacy.

In the tables and maps in Sections 2 and 3 and below the darkest red always represents a negative result, the darkest green always a positive result and shades in between rankings toward the middle.

The statewide rate is the sum of PPV discharges divided by the population of interest (county).

Major Findings

Index 3 – Systems Transformation (Score 42)

Western New York performed well when ranked against regions across the state for Potentially Preventable Re-admissions (PPR), somewhat less well for Potentially Preventable Visits (PPV) to emergency departments, mixed on a ranking of adult Prevention Quality Indicators (PQI), and significantly worse on an array of Pediatric Quality Indicators (PQI). In composite, the region delivered an index score of 42 for Domain 2 metrics of system transformation.

The region ranked very favorably against other New York regions on Potentially Preventable Readmissions to hospitals. A potentially preventable visit rate was calculated for Western New York based on the allocation of hospital-based statistics to counties in which the hospitals are located. Western New York ranked in a cluster with the New York-Pennsylvania and Northeastern New York regions. Other regions, including Finger Lakes, Central New York and Hudson Valley, were considerably higher for PPR.

For Potentially Preventable Visits to hospital emergency rooms, the region ranked slightly below the middle of the pack statewide with a rate of 39.9 per 100 (compared with 35.5 for the state). Performance was not uniform throughout the region, however. Erie, Niagara and Wyoming counties did slightly better than the statewide rate. Chautauqua, Cattaraugus, Allegany and Genesee all did significantly worse than the statewide rate.

Prevention Quality Indicators

The following variables examine avoidable inpatient care by adults (Performance Quality Indicators (PQI) -Adults). Western New York scored very favorably based on the observed rate of admissions for that set of medical conditions.

Prevention Quality Indicators (PQI) for adults encompassed 18 different measures. The region as a whole ranked dead last among Upstate regions for short term complications due to diabetes, lower extremity amputations due to diabetes and on the diabetes composite. The region also ranked last in the state for angina without procedure. Finally, the WNY score for chronic disease composite was in the bottom third of regional rankings.

Niagara and Orleans counties posted a range of negative rankings with Niagara second from the bottom against the other seven WNY counties and second from the bottom against similar counties statewide for the Prevention Quality Composite. Orleans ranked dead last within the region and second to last against other “rural-suburban” counties on the same composite measure.

Niagara County had rankings “in red” for a range of individual metrics including uncontrolled diabetes, dehydration, complications from diabetes long- and short-term, heart failure and asthma in younger adults. Orleans County had bottom rankings for chronic obstructive pulmonary disease or asthma in adults, heart failure, angina without procedure and uncontrolled diabetes.

Across other counties in the region, Erie and Chautauqua counties had the best rankings for Prevention Quality Composite, despite a scattering of lower rankings on individual measures. Wyoming County had the lowest rankings on the composite indicator after Orleans and Niagara Counties.

Pediatric Prevention Quality Indicators

For Pediatric Prevention Quality Indicators (PDI) the region ranked near the bottom against other Upstate regions for the overall composite measure. The composite ranking was driven by similar low regional rankings for asthma, gastroenteritis and short term complications of childhood diabetes. Rankings for Erie County were generally below average. But Allegany County ranked far worse with bottom rung scores for asthma, gastroenteritis and urinary tract infections. Cattaraugus County didn’t do much better. In contrast, scores across the board, for individual metrics and composites, Chautauqua, Orleans and Genesee ranked highly.

4b. Clinical process metrics

Index 4 Clinical Outcomes (Index Score - 42)

Index 4 includes measures of the delivery of services in clinical settings for behavioral health, diabetes mellitus, HIV/AIDs and other sexually transmitted diseases, perinatal care and others. As such these metrics are understood as indicative of quality of care.

Western New York had a middle ranking for the behavioral health group but with some weak scores within it, especially for adherence to anti-psychotic medications for people living with schizophrenia, diabetes screening for people living with schizophrenia or bi-polar disorder using anti-psychotic medications, and diabetes monitoring for people living with schizophrenia and diabetes.

Low rankings for adherence to medication for schizophrenia were posted for Erie, Niagara and Orleans counties. Genesee County, meanwhile, ranked at the bottom for both diabetes screening and diabetes monitoring for schizophrenics.

Other behavioral health “hot spots” for Western New York included Cattaraugus and Chautauqua counties for initiation of alcohol and other drug dependence treatment; and, Orleans County for follow up care for children prescribed ADHD medication and follow up care within 30 days of a hospitalization for mental illness.

The region also was ranked at bottom for diabetes care in general, although a composite ranking was calculated on the basis of one individual metric: comprehensive diabetes care HbA1c testing. Moreover, the poor score for diabetes mellitus care was attributable to less populated counties in the region – Genesee, Allegany and Cattaraugus. Erie, Niagara and Wyoming counties actually had relatively high rankings. Other data in this assessment, however, would warn against underestimating the need around diabetes.

Variations and/or extremes in rates are difficult to interpret for units of analysis with low numbers of enrollees. For this reason, all rates based on denominators of less than 30 enrollees are suppressed

The region ranked strongly overall for HIV/AIDS care. Only Wyoming County had negative rankings for a set of HIV-related indicators: engagement in care, viral load monitoring and syphilis screening. Other hot spots in the group included relatively low rankings for Allegany, Genesee and Orleans counties for cervical cancer screening and Cattaraugus and Genesee counties for chlamydia screening in young women.

For perinatal care based on the single metric of well visits in the first 15 months of life the region ranked just below the middle against other upstate regions. But at the county level the performance might seem a bit weaker. Only Genesee and Allegany counties scored at or above the 50th percentile when compared with their Eberts Code cousins.

The region ranked low on metrics for screening for breast cancer and screening for colorectal cancer. While Erie and Niagara counties ranked relatively high in the region for colorectal cancer screening, they did poorly when compared with similar upstate metropolitan counties. Meanwhile, Orleans, Allegany, Genesee and Wyoming counties had very low rankings on the same metric.

A similar pattern was also evident for breast cancer screening. Erie and Niagara were leaders within the region but lagged behind kindred counties and Wyoming, Orleans, Genesee and Allegany fared even poorer.

Variations and/or extremes in rates are difficult to interpret for units of analysis with low numbers of enrollees. For this reason, all rates based on denominators of less than 30 enrollees are suppressed.

4c. Population Health

Index 5 – Population Health (Index Score - 37)

Index 5 comprised six subdomains with a total of 68 metrics focusing on prevention of chronic disease; improving health status and reducing health disparities; promoting a healthy and safe environment; preventing HIV, sexually transmitted and other preventable diseases; promoting mental health and preventing substance abuse; and promoting healthy women, infants and children.

Health status and health disparities

The region’s best rankings were for the group “improve health status and reduce health disparities” with an overall score of 44. One of the notable exceptions to generally good scores on individual metrics was for the percentage of premature deaths (before age 65) for which WNY ranked behind most other Upstate regions. Erie, Allegany and Wyoming counties had better scores for this metric but the others lagged behind.

The region also scored poorly on preventable hospitalizations for non-Hispanic blacks above age 18 – with much of the issue concentrated in Erie County. Other hot spots included Orleans and Niagara counties for preventable hospitalizations per 10,000 people over age 18. That age-adjusted rate ranked the two counties at the bottom in the region and last among their Eberts cohort.

Cattaraugus County, meanwhile, ranked dead last for the percentage of adults age 18-64 with health insurance with Orleans and Allegany counties not doing much better.

Healthy women, infants and children

Western New York also had a relatively high ranking for the group “promote the health of women, infants and children” – a score of 43. There were, however, some trouble spots among the 25 separate variables that made up that average score.

The region ranked last against other Upstate regions for the percentage of pre-term births, the ratio of pre-term Medicaid births to non-Medicaid pre-term births and the maternal mortality rate per 100,000 births. Niagara County ranked at bottom and Cattaraugus County also did poorly on the percentage or pre-term births. Erie County ranked near the bottom for the ratio of pre-term Medicaid births to non-Medicaid pre-term births. Cattaraugus and Erie counties did poorly on measures of maternal mortality rate.

Breast-feeding was another problem area. The region also scored relatively low for the proportion of non-Hispanic black mothers who exclusively breast-fed their babies in the hospital with the lowest county score in Niagara. Meanwhile, Chautauqua County ranked at the bottom for the proportion of Hispanic mothers who exclusively breast-fed babies in the hospital. Orleans County ranked last in the region and last in its Eberts cohort for the proportion of Medicaid mothers who exclusively breast-fed their babies.

Some of the outlying counties in the region also performed poorly in providing the recommended number of well child visits. Genesee and Orleans had low scores for the percentage of children who had the recommended number of well child visits to age 15 months and among those in government sponsored insurance programs. Genesee Cattaraugus and Allegany had relatively low rates for the percentage of children under 10 with any kind of health insurance while Cattaraugus also ranked at bottom for the percentage of women aged 18 to 64 who had any kind of health insurance at all.

The region did poorly on measures of teen-age pregnancy. It ranked last among Upstate regions for adolescent pregnancy per 1,000 girls age 15-17 with Niagara, Orleans and Cattaraugus with especially low rankings. It also rated poorly for the proportion of teen-age pregnancies to black and Hispanic mothers with especially low rankings for Erie County. The proportion of unintended pregnancies was also relatively high regionally with especially poor numbers in Cattaraugus County.

Safe and healthy environment

Western New York had a somewhat lower score – 38 – for indicators toward promoting a healthy and safe environment. It ranked last among Upstate regions for the rate of emergency department visits due to falls for children aged 1 to 4 with particularly low ranks in Genesee and Chautauqua counties. Genesee County also ranked poorly for the rate of hospitalizations due to falls for people over age 65.

The region also ranked last for the rate of occupational injuries treated in emergency departments for people age 15 to 19. Orleans County ranked at bottom and Wyoming, Allegany and Niagara counties also had poor returns on that measure. WNY also did poorly on the proportion of assault related hospitalizations for non-Hispanic blacks with Allegany and Erie counties with particularly low rankings.

On measures of community sustainability, Western New York also performed poorly. The region ranked last for the percentage of population that lives in a jurisdiction that has adopted the Climate Smart Communities pledge and for the percentage of workers who use alternate modes of transportation or work from home.

A couple of other hot spots appeared. Both Allegany and Cattaraugus counties had very low rankings for the percentage of population with low income and low access to a supermarket or large grocery store. Niagara County did poorly in relation to the Healthy Neighborhood Program aimed at reducing asthma triggers in residences.

Chronic disease

Western New York ranked even lower on measures of preventing chronic disease – a score of 36. Problem areas included diabetes, heart attacks, asthma and obesity, all of which were issues prominently raised in the community engagement elements of the assessment process.

The region ranked dead last for the rate of hospitalizations for short-term complications of diabetes for adults with Niagara and Orleans counties both performing poorly on that measure. WNY ranked second to last among Upstate counties for hospitalizations for short-term complications of diabetes for adolescents with the poorest rates in Genesee and Cattaraugus counties.

Niagara and Orleans counties, again, drove a negative regional ranking – second from the bottom – for the age-adjusted rate of hospitalizations due to heart attacks.

The region had relatively poor rankings for two measures of asthma – emergency department visits per 10,000 people and ED visits per 10,000 for children age 1 to 4. Much of that problem could be pegged to experience in Erie County which ranked last in the region and third from bottom within its Eberts Code cohort.

Other hot spots included the percentage of adults who are obese in Wyoming and Cattaraugus counties; the percentage of children and adolescents who are obese in Niagara, Orleans and Allegany counties; the percentage of adults who smoke with worst scores in Orleans, Niagara and Erie counties; and the percentage of adults 50 to 75 years old who receive colorectal cancer screening where Niagara County ranked last in the region and last among similar counties.

Mental health and substance abuse

The region’s second lowest ranking was for promoting mental health and preventing substance abuse – a score of 33. The number of metrics was smaller for this group and the statistical evidence not as strong, but the general direction of the numbers seems consistent with other data sources gathered for this assessment.

The lowest ranking for an individual metric was for the age-adjusted death rate from suicide per 100,000 people. However, this was the only measure in the group which produced a regional ranking, thus making it also the average for the whole group. Lowest county rankings for this metric were for Wyoming, Allegany and Niagara.

There were, however, several other hot spots. Scores for binge drinking were very high for Wyoming, Cattaraugus and Erie counties. And Orleans County ranked poorly for the age-adjusted rate for adults who reported poor mental health 14 or more days in the previous month.

HIV, STDs and other infectious diseases

Western New York’s very lowest ranking – a score of 27 – was for the group “prevent HIV/ STDs, vaccine preventable diseases and health care associated infections. But the heart of the problem was HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases and the location was almost exclusively Erie County.

The region ranked last against other Upstate regions for the disparity of HIV diagnoses between white and both black and Hispanic individuals. It ranked second to last for the rate of newly diagnosed cases of HIV. On the latter measure, Orleans County had nearly as poor a ranking as Erie.

The region – and again, with the problem concentrated mostly in Erie County – also ranked very low for rates of gonorrhea in men and women and chlamydia in women. Niagara and Orleans also had relatively poor rankings on these measures as well but not as low as Erie County.

There were several additional hot spots – poor county rankings in the context of better regional rankings. These included rates for primary and secondary syphilis cases – high in Erie County; low rates of immunization for HPV in Orleans County; and low rates of immunization for influenza in Cattaraugus County.

5. Project Specific Analytics

Introduction

FTI's Center for Healthcare Economics and Policy prepared the following section to offer project by project information comparing Western New York to the rest of the state and demonstrate, for each project, that the region and its component counties lie beyond what should be considered acceptable. It is meant to supplement Section 4 by providing more specific data for each project. It pulls from many different sources including those available through the DSRIP site and NY's Department of Health and carefully describes the differences between the counties, the region, and the state.

Data Sources

SPARCS Data

Primarily, the SPARCS (Statewide Planning and Research Cooperative System) data includes information about the patient, information about the diagnoses and procedures, and information about the providers involved. It also includes many other data that could be relevant based on the topic (such as birthweights). Throughout this section, both Inpatient and Outpatient SPARCS data are included. The Inpatient data is from 2012 the Outpatient (and ED) data are from 2013).

SALIENT Dashboards

Primary Care Utilization – Salient has provided information on primary care utilization among Medicaid beneficiaries by ZIP code and county for the state. It can be broken down by age group. It contains a count of enrollees, the number of visits, the number of enrollees with visits, and it calculates a visit rate by enrollee-month. It should be noted that the number of enrollees provided is different from that used for other tables in this section.

NPI Data

The National Provider Identifier (NPI) database contains all providers with an NPI number in the nation along with their practicing address, name, and specialties. It is updated monthly. For the tables in this document, the October-2014 data were used.

CDC Mortality Data

Mortality data for cardiovascular conditions come from the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) website. Mortality can be calculated by county and by cause of death. Data are available up to 2011. For this analysis, mortality data were calculated over 2010-2011 to help average out shocks.

Medicaid Inpatient Prevention Quality Indicators for Adult Discharges by Patient County: Beginning 2011

PQI admissions are defined by the Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality (AHRQ) and are designed to highlight conditions where proper ambulatory care could possibly obviate further treatment. For example, with proper out-of-hospital care, certain conditions would be rare among diabetics. The PQI metrics focus on those types of conditions to provide information on the quality of the out-of-hospital care.

Medicaid Chronic Conditions, Inpatient Admissions and Emergency Room Visits by County: Beginning 2012

From NY DOH: This dataset contains Potentially Preventable Visit (PPV) observed, expected, and risk-adjusted rates for Medicaid beneficiaries by patient county and patient ZIP code beginning in 2011. The Potentially Preventable Visits (PPV), obtained from software created by 3M Health Information Systems, are emergency visits that may result from a lack of adequate access to care or ambulatory care coordination. These ambulatory sensitive conditions could be reduced or eliminated with adequate patient monitoring and follow up. The rates were calculated using Medicaid inpatient and outpatient data for the numerator and Medicaid enrollment in the county for the denominator. The observed, expected and risk adjusted rates for PPV are presented by resident county (including a statewide total).

New York State Prevention Agenda

From NY DOH: The Prevention Agenda is a blueprint for state and local organizations to improve the health of New Yorkers in five priority areas and to reduce health disparities for racial, ethnic, disabled, and other socioeconomic groups who experience them. Tracking indicators were developed to assess the current population's health status and to monitor how the overarching goal and five Prevention Agenda priority area objectives are being met. The original table includes baseline data and the Prevention Agenda 2017 objectives for numerous indicators that are organized under the overarching goal and the five major priority areas.

5a. Create Integrated Delivery Systems that Are Focused on Evidence-Based Medicine/Population Health Management (2.a.i)

Summary

Using data sources available through the DOH's websites supplemented with internal data, outlined below is the state of the health care delivery system in Western New York. The analysis focuses on metrics that provide an overall sense of the health care system such as preventable readmission rates and primary care utilization. The information below shows WNY compares unfavorably to New York State in a variety of aspects. The analysis indicates the extent of work that needs to be done to address these challenges in the area.

Project Description

The health care system in the US and New York is characterized by its fragmentation — different categories of providers interact with each other along with a multitude of payers including government-run, non-profit, and for-profit. With so many entities participating, many times the patient does not receive the care he or she should because of mis-coordination or no coordination at all. The integrated delivery system (IDS) is being explored throughout the country in an effort to put the patient back at the center of treatment and reconfigure an infrastructure where all of the different participants work together, focus on their piece, and disseminate important information to ensure the patient receives the medical attention s/he requires.

This project intends to begin building the relationships between the system's components such as primary care, post-acute care, long term care, behavioral health, and acute care to name a few. After they have formed this relationship, they will also be able to look at the health of the community as a whole and develop efforts to address the most significant issues.

Rationale

The tables and figures below present some information relevant to an integrated delivery system, specifically hospital readmissions and primary care utilization. Data are compared by county in Western New York, the Western New York region, and the state.

The information available is used to highlight the evidence that WNY's data indicate substantially poorer performance than those for New York State or Western New York. These tables and figures will support the inclusion of the IDS Project in the DSRIP Workplan.

The data sources used in this section include those designated on the NY DSRIP website as critical healthcare data; statewide discharges from NY State from the SPARCS dataset. Primarily, it includes information about the patient, information about the diagnoses and procedures, and the providers involved. It also includes many other data that could be relevant based on the topic (such as birthweights). The analyses rely on 2012 Medicaid Utilization data from the Health Data NY website, Primary Care Physician Utilization data provided by Salient on the DSRIP dashboards (Dashboard 8), the Medicaid Chronic Condition data provided on the Health Data NY website.

Table 1 breaks down PQI hospitalizations by PQI Category and county for the counties in Western New York. Not surprisingly Erie County has the highest number of PQI hospitalizations for the region, followed by Niagara. COPD has the highest number of hospitalizations, followed by Heart Failure and Bacterial Pneumonia. This suggests that CVD issues are important in the region, while diabetes occurring at places four and five also indicate the prevalence of that chronic condition. These both will be discussed in the pertinent projects later

Table 2 shows the count and rate of PQI admissions as a measure of preventable admissions. PQI admissions are defined by AHRQ and are designed to highlight conditions where proper ambulatory care could possibly obviate further treatment. For example, with proper out-of-hospital care, certain conditions would be rare among diabetics. The PQI metrics focus on those types of conditions to provide information on the quality of out-of-hospital care.

There are 16 PQI metrics and several aggregated measures. In Table 2, the number of Medicaid PQI Hospitalizations (patients with one of the conditions of interest) is the first column. The second column calculates the rate of PQI hospitalizations for the county by dividing by the number of adult Medicaid beneficiaries. The final column risk-adjusts the rate which reveals what the rate would be in the county, if the demographics matched those of NY State. WNY has an 11 percent lower observed rate of these admissions than NY State. Niagara and Wyoming counties have the highest observed rates in WNY, which are respectively 15 and 11 percent higher than the state average of 1,784. The observed rate in Allegany County is 32 percent lower than the state average. While WNY's rate is 8 percent lower than the State average, this average is largely driven by Erie County, and Niagara, Orleans, and Wyoming would benefit most with regard to PQI from steps to better coordinate care.

Table 3 shows counts and rates of preventable ED visits. WNY has an eight percent higher observed rate of ED visits compared to NY State, indicating a high rate of utilization and that the area's Medicaid patients are using the ED more than necessary. The table presents potentially preventable ED visits, and then also observed and risk-adjusted rates per 10,000 Medicaid Beneficiaries.

Higher levels of ED preventable visits rates and counts are due to many factors, which are discussed more in the next section, but an important reason could be access to primary care or low Primary Care utilization. This project is designed to address these issues. Six out of the 8 counties have higher observed and risk-adjusted rates of preventable ED visits per 10,000 beneficiaries than the State average, and WNY as a whole exceeds the State average. Chautauqua and Cattaraugus counties have the highest observed rates of ED utilization in WNY, 46 and 33 percent higher than the NY State rate. Wyoming County has the lowest observed rate in WNY of 3,313 ED visits, eight percent lower than the state average.

Table 4 presents information on primary care utilization for the counties in WNY and NY State, including beneficiary counts, PCP visit counts, and the PCP visit rate. WNY has a 28 percent lower PCP visit rate and a lower proportion of beneficiaries (only 60 percent) with a PCP visit compared to NY State (64 percent). Erie and Genesee Counties have the lowest PCP Visit rates, about 30% lower when compared to the state average and five counties have less than 60 percent of their Medicaid beneficiaries visiting a Primary Care Physician. One of the possible challenges that would need to be addressed is to ensure beneficiaries have access to PCPs (e.g., that there is an adequate supply of physicians who accept Medicaid and they are conveniently located).

Readmissions for inpatient services represents additional utilization and potential source of increased expenditure. Table 5 documents information on readmissions in WNY and presents it by categories of healthcare service. It shows the proportions of patients who have multiple admissions, and shows this by major diagnostic category (MDC) for WNY and NY State.

The patients column shows the number of unique Medicaid patients who were admitted to a hospital from WNY for that MDC. The second column, average admissions/patient divides the total number of admissions for that MDC by the number of Medicaid patients to determine, on average, how many times patients are admitted for that MDC.

The third column shows how many patients were admitted more than once for that MDC and the next column calculates the percentage of patients who were readmitted. The final column shows the percentage for NY State as a reference.

The MDCs with the highest readmission rates included Myeloproliferative DDs, Mental Diseases and Disorders, and Blood/Blood Forming Organs and Immunological Disorders. For these MDCs, WNY had a higher proportion (consistently 1 percentage point) of patients with multiple admissions compared to NY State. The Mental Health readmissions are a cause for particular concern and are addressed in more detail in subsequent sections.

For many of the MDCs in Table 5, the WNY rate exceeds that of NY State, and one of the goals of this project in particular would be to get those rates closer to or below NY State's rates.

5b. ED Care Triage (2.b.iii)

Summary

Using the data sources available to us through the DOH's websites and internal data, outlined below is the state of ED care in Western New York and New York State. The data show that the region performs worse than the state with regard to Emergency Department care and overutilization.

Project Description

Emergency Department utilization is a significant issue in Western New York. Medicaid beneficiaries use the ED for several reasons: foremost among them potentially is perceived convenience since the ED's hours are much longer than those of primary care physicians. Secondly, many beneficiaries do not have an on-going relationship with a primary care physician, so many of them rely on the ED for routine care that EDs were not meant to treat. Reducing ED utilization by encouraging patients to build a relationship with a primary care physician could reduce the pressure on the overly strained resources in the region and allow those resources to be redirected towards those with urgent needs that the ED was meant to serve.

Rationale

In the tables below, we characterize and evaluate the state of Emergency Department utilization in Western New York. We have included all pertinent information available to date to highlight the evidence that WNY's data indicate substantially poorer performance than those for New York State. These tables and figures will support the inclusion of the ED Care Triage Project in the DSRIP Workplan.

The data sources we draw from include the materials designated on the NY DSRIP website as critical information and data as well as supplementary data such as SPARCS discharge data. This ED utilization analyses, uses the 2012 Medicaid Utilization data from the Health Data NY website, Primary Care Physician Utilization data provided by Salient on the DSRIP dashboards (Dashboard 8), the Medicaid Chronic Condition data provided on the Health Data NY website, and the 2013. SPARCS ED data.

Table 6 shows the count and rate of PQI discharges as a measure of preventable admissions. WNY has an 11 percent lower observed rate of these admissions than NY State. Niagara and Wyoming counties have the highest observed rates in WNY, which are respectively 15 and 11 percent higher than the state average of 1,784, while the observed rate in Allegany County is 32 percent lower than the state average. While WNY's rate is 8 percent lower than the states', this is mostly driven by Erie County. Niagara, Orleans, and Wyoming would benefit most with regard to PQI from steps to better coordinate care.

Table 7 shows counts and rates of preventable ED visits. WNY has an eight percent higher observed rate of ED visits compared to NY State, suggesting that Medicaid patients are using the ED more than necessary. Often, this is due to factors such as the lack of Primary Care utilization. This problem would be one of the most significant issues this project would work to address. Chautauqua and Cattaraugus Counties have the highest observed rates in WNY, 46 and 33 percent higher than the NY State rate. Wyoming County has the lowest observed rate in WNY of 3,313 ED visits, eight percent lower than the state average.

Table 8 presents information on primary care utilization for the counties in WNY and NY State, including beneficiary counts, PCP visit counts, and the PCP visit rate. Taken with Table 7, it suggests that Medicaid patients in the region rely on the ED for care instead of using primary care. WNY has a 28 percent lower PCP visit rate and a lower proportion of beneficiaries (60 percent) with a PCP visit compared to NY State (64 percent). Erie and Genesee Counties have the lowest PCP Visit rates, about 30 percent lower compared to the state average and five counties have less than 60 percent of their Medicaid beneficiaries visiting a Primary Care Physician. One of the possible challenges that would need to be addressed is to ensure beneficiaries have access to PCPs which are conveniently located.

Table 9 indicates that there are several counties where a larger proportion of total ED visits are from Medicaid beneficiaries than the rate in the state. Erie County, the largest county in the region, is one such county. Chautauqua, too, has a high percentage of ED Medicaid utilization.

Table 11 breaks down visits to the Emergency Department by diagnosis category. The results are sorted by the number of patients for that category. Both the third and fourth columns indicate readmissions. The third column shows how many admissions, on average, each patient admitted has. Taking the second row—mental disorders—of the 1,260 patients in WNY who were admitted to the ED with that diagnosis, each one, on average visited 1.51 times. The fourth column contains a correlated, but different metric, the percentage of patients admitted who returned at least once with the same diagnosis. The WNY rate exceeds the NY State rate for more than half of the ICD9 classifications. Although not higher than the state rate, the re-visit rate for mental disorders is extremely high.

5c. Implementing the INTERACT Project (2.b.vii)

Summary

Using the data sources available through the DOH's websites and supplementing with internal data, outlined below is the state of skilled nursing facilities in Western New York. Western New York is compared to New York State across several indicators. The information shows how due to high demand for SNF in WNY Counties, coordination is vital and Project 2.b.vii is especially suited for the DSRIP.

Project Description

Because avoidable readmissions are unnecessary and costly, and because Skilled Nursing Facilities have the resources and infrastructure to ensure patients receive the proper and crucial care that can prevent patients from returning to the hospital, it is advantageous to strengthen the connections between hospitals and SNFs and ensure information is passed reliably in both directions. The DSRIP SNF project seeks to improve the care coordination between the staffs at the SNF and the hospital.

Some suggested strategies include enhancing or ensuring discharge summaries, building direct informational ties between SNFS and hospitals, and standardized care transitions.

Rationale

In the tables and figures below, we characterize and evaluate the state of Skilled Nursing Facilities in Western New York. We have included all pertinent information available to date to highlight the evidence that WNY's data indicate poorer performance than those for New York State. These tables and figures will support the inclusion of the SNF INTERACT project in the DSRIP Workplan.

The data sources we draw from are more limited for SNFs, and we rely only on SPARCS discharge data.

Table 12 provides high-level information about SNF utilization by county in WNY, including counts of SNF visits, SNF patients, and beneficiaries. The table was generated using SPARCS inpatient data, and patients were flagged as SNF patients if they were admitted from or discharged to an SNF. Beneficiaries receiving SNF care are dual eligible, and so tend to use more healthcare resources. Though half of the eight WNY counties have admission rates higher than NY State, WNY at large has fewer SNF admissions/beneficiary than the state.

The highest utilization rates in WNY are in Genesee and Wyoming Counties, which are 64 and 35 percent greater than the state average of about 16.1, respectively. The lowest is Chautauqua County with a visit rate 38 percent lower than the state average.

The percentage of beneficiaries who visit SNFs is slightly higher in WNY than the state. Again, the counties with the greatest proportions of SNF users are Genesee and Wyoming, while the lowest is in Chautauqua.

Table 13 shows the total counts of SNF discharges and SNF patients, as well as the average number of discharges per patient. Allegany has the highest admission rate (1.51), and is still below the state average (1.53). The lowest visit rates are in Chautauqua and Wyoming Counties (1.29 and 1.28 visits/admittee).

Table 14 compares the average number of dischargers per patient for patients ever discharged to a SNF compared to all other inpatients. WNY's SNF/non-SNF discharge ratio is greater than NY State's, suggesting that SNF patients are visiting more often compared to a baseline in WNY than in NY State.

Table 15 compares the admissions of SNF Medicaid patients to that of all other Medicaid Patients by Major Diagnostic Category. In the third column, percentages over 100 percent indicate that SNF patients have more admissions for that MDC than do non-SNF patients (in Medicaid). Figures under 100 percent mean SNF patients have fewer admissions/patient. Surprisingly, only one MDC exceeds 100 percent – Infectious and Parasitic DDs.

5d. Hospital-Home Care Collaboration Solutions (2.b.viii)

Summary

Using the data sources available through the DOH's websites and internal data, outlined below is information related to home health care. The data show that the region fares worse than the state.

Project Description

Many patients, Medicaid and non-Medicaid, have trouble accessing the health system due to a number of issues – they live far from providers (both hospitals and physicians) or they have limited mobility. To ensure that these patients have the highest level of access, it is sometimes necessary and prudent to bring health services to them. As technologies advance, utilization of them to increase access to care and care itself should be a prime objective of the health system, and the community's providers should expand use of those technologies to ensure patients have the option of recovering at home and receive proper treatment for chronic conditions. To do so, the providers must work together to coordinate such home health services.

Rationale

The data sources we draw from include the materials designated on the NY DSRIP website as critical information and data as well as supplementary data such as SPARCS discharge data.

Table 16 includes information on SNF patients in Western New York. Home health would offer an alternative to discharging patients to skilled nursing facilities, and allow them to be cared for in more comfortable surroundings. Table 16 shows that WNY (and especially Cattaraugus, Genesee, Niagara, and Orleans Counties) have higher SNF occupancy rates than the state. This project would help reduce those numbers by diverting patients home and possibly reducing lengths of stay for those in the SNFs.

Table 17 shows average length of stay for the counties and region. By implementing the home care collaboration project, those lengths of stay could be reduced as patients could be discharged to their homes with the assurance that they'll be taken care of by the new services that are part of this program.

5e. Telemedicine (2.c.ii)

Summary

Using the data sources available through the DOH’s websites and supplementing with internal data, the case for inclusion for telemedicine is laid out below. Western New York is compared to New York State across several indicators. The information shows how due to high demand for SNF in WNY Counties, coordination is vital and Project 2.c.ii is especially suited for the DSRIP.

Project Description

Many patients, Medicaid and non-Medicaid, have trouble accessing the health system due to a number of issues—they live far from providers (both hospitals and physicians) or they have limited mobility. To ensure that these patients have the highest level of access, it is sometimes necessary and prudent to bring health services to them. One method of doing so is telemedicine. As technologies advance, utilization of them to increase access to care and care itself should be a prime objective of the health system. Telemedicine is also suited for chronic disease management, psychiatry, and primary care utilization.

Rationale

Table 18 shows the proportion of the population who don’t have a vehicle. In an area such as Western New York that lacks a robust public transportation system, vehicle ownership is fundamental for adequate access to care. Overall, in WNY, 12.2 percent of households do not own a vehicle. Erie County has the lowest rate of ownership, followed by Chautauqua, Cattaraugus, and Niagara Counties.

Table 18 - County Level Detail Access to Transportation

Figure 1 (taken from Section 3) shows how near populations are to acute care hospitals. Acute care hospitals in Western New York are concentrated around population centers. Of the 42 acute care hospitals in the region, more than half (25) are located in the region’s two metropolitan counties – Erie and Niagara. This concentration leads to higher proximity scores for zip codes in the cities of Buffalo, Niagara Falls and their adjacent suburbs where the concentrations of Medicaid enrollees are lower.

In the region’s more rural counties, cities like Jamestown, Olean and Batavia also have hospitals and generate relatively high proximity scores. However, the dispersed populations just beyond these centers are relatively underserved by hospitals. This is most apparent in the northern swath of Allegany County and the southern edge of Wyoming County, which includes the highest intensity of the relatively low proximity scores across the region.

In sum, Figure 1 corroborates the commonly-held assumption that populations in rural areas distance from care is much greater than their urban counterparts. Unlike all subsequent proximity assessments, this measure is based solely on distance and does not factor in for the number of people in each ZIP code.

5f. Implementation of Patient and Community Activation Activities (2.d.i)

Summary

Using the data sources available through the DOH's websites and supplementing with internal data, outlined below is the state of the uninsured and under-utilizing Medicaid Patients in Western New York. Western New York is compared to New York State across several indicators. The information shows how underutilization is an especially critical issue in Western New York

Project Description

In Western New York (and the state in general) there are many people who are eligible to use Medicaid who choose not to. For the uninsured, too, the reasons are myriad. For some it is too difficult to go through the process either because their work lives don't permit or families don't allow them the time to do so. People disconnected from the health care economy, though, will eventually have to interact with it. Problematically, the longer they have been away, the more likely they'll need to use it suddenly, and the more drastic will be their condition.

By ensuring that all have access to the system, we can better promote healthy living and prevent many health issues that require years of poor living to develop. Project 2.d.i is meant to address these issues by identifying and reaching out to those who are not part of the system to improve the long-term health of the community.

Rationale

The tables and figures below characterize and evaluate the state of under-utilization in Western New York. All pertinent information available to date is included to highlight the evidence that WNY's data indicate poorer performance than those for New York State. These tables and figures will support the inclusion of Project 2.d.i in the DSRIP Workplan.

While it would be useful to compare the take-up of Medicaid among the eligible, data on Medicaid eligibility are not available at the county level and are currently being included.

Table 19 shows the Medicaid utilization of inpatient, outpatient, ED, and primary care services to determine what percentage of beneficiaries are not using the health care system. The OP, IP, and ED figures were calculated by dividing the number of unique Medicaid beneficiaries in the SPARCS discharge data by the total number of beneficiaries in the county.

While WNY Medicaid patients are more likely to use IP, OP, and ED facilities than the state in general, despite their poor health they are less likely to see a PCP. Orleans County is the only county where the PCP visit matches the State's, all other counties in WNY have lower PCP utilization, with Genesee having the lowest. The low rate of PCP utilization in the area must be addressed to ensure that Medicaid beneficiaries have the proper access to care. Doing so would help the state achieve its Innovation Plan goals—especially the State goal for Pillar 1 'to reduce by 50 percent the proportion of adults without a usual source of care', among others (as taken from the New York State Health Innovation Plan submitted to CMS in December 2013).

Table 20 shows uninsured rates for WNY and the state. WNY has a lower proportion of uninsured (10.8 percent) compared to NYS (13.7 percent); Cattaraugus County has the highest proportion of uninsured in WNY (14.1 percent), slightly higher than the state average. Erie County has the lowest proportion of uninsured (10 percent) in WNY.

5g. Integration of Primary Care and Behavioral Health Services (3.a.i)

Summary

Using the data sources available through the DOH's websites and supplementing with internal data, outlined below is the state of mental and behavioral healthcare in Western New York and New York State across several indicators. The information shows how the region has several challenges to overcome in this area, and Project 3.a.i is especially needed.

Project Description

Mental health issues are difficult to address because unlike physical health issues, the patients themselves do not have the same capacity for self-treatment. This challenge makes necessary special provisions for treatment of these patients. Examples of the additional needs include early diagnosis of any conditions and attention to all the treatments patients are receiving. The latter example requires that care be more integrated so that providers and physicians have access to all of a patient's medical records. Without that information and data, the physician could prescribe a medication that could adversely interact with other medications causing harm to the patient.

Lastly, de-stigmatizing mental health issues is of primary importance. The negative impression from mental health issues leads to delay or even avoidance of necessary treatment. One goal of this project is to bring patients who need treatment into the healthcare system.

Rationale

Mental health issues are an especially challenging problem in Western New York. As is the case in many low income areas, mental health problems are prevalent in the population. The sections below support the notion that mental health issues are a significant challenge to the healthcare system in the region.

The data sources include the materials that the NYS DSRIP website directs us to as well as supplementary data such as SPARCS discharge data. We draw from the 2012 Medicaid Utilization data from the Health Data NY website, the Medicaid Chronic Condition data provided on the Health Data NY website and the 2012 SPARCS Inpatient data.

Table 21 shows average admission rates for chronic mental health conditions by county in WNY and for the state. Admission rates were determined as the number of inpatient admissions per beneficiary with the condition. Of the included conditions, Western New York's rate exceeded that of NY State for Depression, and was 12 percent higher. Niagara County's rate exceeds NY's by 65 percent. For the first three behavioral conditions, there are several counties that exceed NY State's rate. Niagara County exceeds it in all categories, for instance.

Table 22 presents information on readmissions for patients with mental health conditions, as defined by Major Diagnostic Category. The table includes the proportion of patients with multiple admissions and the average number of readmissions per patient. It indicates that readmissions due to mental health issues are a problem in WNY, as it had a slightly higher proportion of patients with multiple admissions compared to NY State, and the admissions/patient were higher for WNY. Again, we see that Niagara County fares worse than the rest of WNY and NY State as a whole.

Table 23 presents information on access to psychiatrists and psychologists in WNY compared to NY State. The table contains count of beneficiaries, as well as the number of psychiatrists/psychologists per 10,000 beneficiaries. On average, NY State has almost twice as many psychiatrists/psychologists per beneficiary compared to WNY. This is indicative of a critical shortage of access to care for Mental Health issues in the area.

5h. Behavioral Health Community Crisis Stabilization Services (3.a.ii)

Summary

Using the data sources available through the DOH's websites and supplementing with internal data, outlined below is the state of mental and behavioral healthcare in Western New York and New York State across several indicators. The information shows how the region has several challenges to overcome in this area, and Project 3.a.ii is especially needed

Rationale

Table 24 presents information on ED re-visits for behavioral health conditions in WNY sorted by patient volume. The table contains patient counts, average number of readmissions and the proportion of patients with re-visits by diagnosis code. Diagnoses where WNY's rate is worse than NY State's are highlighted in red. Schizophrenia and alcohol-related diagnoses tended to be associated with higher re-visit rates.

Project Description

To ensure that the most unstable behavioral health patients have access to the proper medical treatment, it's important to guarantee that emergency departments and other health providers have the ability to call on specialty expert care management for these patients. This supplementary management would include monitoring in a safe location and access to psychiatric stabilization if short-term monitoring is unsuccessful.

5i. CVD Management in High Risk/Affected Populations (3.b.i)

Summary

Using the data sources available through the DOH's websites and supplementing with internal data, outlined below is the state of cardiovascular disease in Western New York. The information shows how WNY has a population with high rates of cardiovascular disease (CVD), and that Project 3bi is especially needed.

Project Description

Heart disease is the leading cause of death of Americans, and one of the leading drivers of health care costs. According to the CDC, about 1 of every 6 dollars spent in health care is directly or indirectly caused by heart disease. Reducing the prevalence of heart disease, therefore, should be one of the top priorities of any health reform program. Because of the potential upside, this project advocates the adoption of evidence-based practices to reduce the costs and prevalence of heart disease, such as increased disease management through enhanced treatment guidelines, additional assistance for patient self-management, and more pro-active intervention with the community.

Rationale

The Western New York Region has a higher incidence of cardiovascular disease than the rest of New York. In the tables and figures below, the counties of Western New York are compared to each other and the state to demonstrate that CVD is a major factor in the area and that this project (3.b.i.) is necessary and beneficial to the region.

The information included is drawn from CDC mortality data from 2010-2011 (the most recent two years available), SPARCS 2012 Inpatient data, and the Medicaid Chronic Conditions data made available from New York's Department of Health. For both the CDC data and SPARCS data, the patient's condition was categorized as a CVD condition in one of two ways — either using the major diagnostic category 5 designation or by using the ranges of ICD-9 codes related to cardiovascular disease (390-459).

Table 25 details mortality by county due to CVD conditions. The mortality due to CVD is much higher (24.5 percent) in WNY than in the state at large, although the percent of deaths attributable to CVD is lower in WNY, suggesting that WNY has an overall higher mortality rate. Cattaraugus, Niagara, and Chautauqua Counties all have rates above 300/100,000 people (while WNY's rate is 286.5 and NY State's is 230.1). Wyoming County has the lowest rate 205.7. Niagara, Orleans, and Cattaraugus all have a higher proportion of their mortality due to CVD than the state.

County/Region	CVD Deaths	Population (combined)	Rate	Total Deaths	% Attributable to CVD

Table 26 lays out the same information by ICD10 group, comparing WNY's rate to NY State's. By ICD-10 Group, WNY's mortality rates are higher for acute myocardial infarction, "All Other Forms of Heart Disease," Heart Failure, and Hypertensive Heart Disease. The rates are lower for "All other forms of chronic ischemic heart disease" and Atherosclerotic cardiovascular disease. This kind of information would allow more specific targeting for the CVD project in Western New York.

Table 27 shows CVD Inpatient Medicaid Admissions for WNY. CVD Admission rates are generally lower for WNY than the rest of the state. In no county are they higher than the state average, though Niagara, Orleans, and Genesee counties have the highest rates within WNY. Breaking down by diagnosis, WNY fares better than the state for many of the diagnoses; the exceptions are Cerebrovascular disease and Pulmonary Circulation. Counties sometimes exceed the state average for certain disease.

Table 28 lays out Medicaid CVD Inpatient Admission rates by diagnosis to understand which particular conditions are most responsible for CVD utilization in the area and compared to the state. As far as Chronic Conditions, Hypertension is the only one with higher rates for WNY than in NY State, though, again some counties (such as Niagara for Angina and Ischemic Heart Disease surpass the state rate).

Finally, Table 29 breaks down the Medicaid Chronic Condition data provided by the Department of Health by condition. Again, Hypertension rates in WNY exceed those in NY State, supporting the inclusion of this project into the program. Reducing rates of hypertension would be one of the primary objectives of the CVD project.

5j. Increase Support Programs for Maternal & Child Health (3.f.i)

Summary

Using the data sources available through the DOH's websites and supplementing with internal data, outlined below is the state of maternal health in Western New York. The information shows how WNY has several health issues regarding maternal health, and that Project 3.f.i is especially needed to address them.

Project Description

Newborns who were considered high risk pregnancies due to their mother's age or medical conditions continue to be at increased risk of developing health problems in their early years. Support programs targeting these newborns and mothers would be a small intervention that could yield substantial long-term results.

Rationale

To support this project, Table 30 reproduces the Prevention Agenda Dashboard available from the Department of Health. These lay out multiple characteristics the state considers important to support women's and children's health. The data are for the entire population and are not restricted to Medicaid, though there are Medicaid-specific metrics included. Only WNY as a whole is included in Table 5, but the component counties are also available if needed.

Also included are NY State's 2017 goals. There are fifteen metrics in which Western New York performs worse than the state goals. Western New York performs well in the breastfeeding category (only the black-white ratio is worse than the 2017 goal), and it's performing well compared to goals in adolescent birth. For the latter, however, the goals are worse than the state performance. WNY is doing much worse than the state on these metrics, even though it is outperforming the goals.

Table 31 breaks down mothers' age at delivery. For the state, 94.3% of mothers are at least twenty years old. For the region, that number is only 91.8%. The region has a higher percentage of births at every age level under 20. Particularly high are Chautauqua, Allegany, and Cattaraugus Counties, though each county is above the state average.

Table 36 compares the average inpatient lengths of stay (LOS) for pre-mature vs. normal births and presents the ratio of premature/normal LOS for WNY. WNY overall has a higher ratio, indicating an average LOS that is longer for pre-mature births, compared to NY State.

Distressingly, the table shows that premature newborns are in the hospital 7-8 times as long as normal newborns, and during their stays they require much more medical attention than do the full-term newborns, so the costs to Medicaid would be even higher (than 7-8 times). Any effort to decrease the proportion of premature newborns would substantially benefit the newborns, their parents, and the healthcare system.

5k. Integration of Palliative Care into PCMH Model (Project 3.g.i)

Summary

Using the data sources available through the DOH's websites and supplementing with internal data, outlined below is the state of palliative care in Western New York. The information shows how WNY has a population with greater need for palliative care, and that Project 3.g.i would promote the well-being of the region's population.

Project Description

A large proportion of medical spending (and Medicaid spending) is focused on End of Life care. It focuses on relieving symptoms, pain, and stress of serious illness and is provided by both doctors and nurses. People of any age could be candidates for palliative care. Increasing access can help ensure end of life planning needs are met before they become urgent so that the patients receive the treatment they prefer.

Rationale

Palliative care programs have experienced rapid growth since 2000 with the major expansion primarily in the area of inpatient consultations. A growing body of evidence supports outpatient palliative care. In the United States, five percent of the population is responsible for nearly half of all health care expenditures, with a large concentration of spending driven by individuals with expensive chronic conditions in their last year of life. Outpatient palliative care under the Medicare Hospice Benefit excludes a large proportion of the chronically ill and there is widespread recognition that innovative strategies must be developed to meet the needs of the seriously ill while reducing costs.

A local team of physicians including Chris Kerr and John Tangeman have published "Clinical Impact of a Home-Based Palliative Care: A Hospice and Private Payer Partnership" in the Journal of Pain and Symptom Management February 2014 reporting that home based palliative care improved symptom management, advance directive completion and patient satisfaction. Cost savings were apparent in the last three months of life ($6,804 per member per month (PMPM) cost for palliative care participants vs. $10,712 for usual care). During the last two weeks of life, total allowed PMPM was $6,674 vs. $13,846 for usual care. Enhanced hospice entry (70 vs. 25 percent) and longer length of stay in hospice (median 34 vs. 9 days) were observed. In addition there was clear evidence of both patient and caregiver satisfaction. This WNY based program a team of nurses, social workers, trained volunteers cared for patients in the home. Unlike hospice, home based palliative care requires neither a limited prognosis nor patients forgoing curative treatments. The current fee for service environment limits provision of home based palliative care despite its potential for cost savings and decreased hospitalizations.

This program and outcome study supports the expansion of palliative care into the increasing number of PCMH practices in WNY.

5I. Promote Mental, Emotional, and Behavioral Well-Being (4.a.i)

Summary

Using the data sources available through the DOH's websites and supplementing with internal data, outlined below is the state of mental and behavioral healthcare in Western New York and New York State across several indicators. The information shows how the region has several challenges to overcome in this area, and Project 3.a.ii is especially needed

Project Description

Mental health issues are difficult to address because unlike physical health issues, the patients themselves do not have the same capacity for self-treatment. This challenge makes necessary special provisions for treatment of these patients. Examples of the additional needs include early diagnosis of any conditions and attention to all the treatments patients are receiving. The latter example requires that care be more integrated so that providers and physicians have access to all of a patient's medical records. Without that information and data, the physician could prescribe a medication that could adversely interact with other medications causing harm to the patient.

Lastly, it is essential to recognize the importance of de-stigmatizing mental health issues. The negative impression from mental health issues leads to delay or even avoidance of necessary treatment. One goal of this project is to bring patients who need treatment into the healthcare system.

Rationale

Table 34 contains information on select health prevention metrics, including the percentages of adults with poor mental health and adults who binged on alcohol, as well as the suicide death rate. WNY did not meet the state goals for these metrics, and performed worse on two of the three metrics compared to NY State.

Table 34 - County Level Detail Prevention Agenda Statistics (2010-2014)

5m. Promote Tobacco Use Cessation (4.b.i)

Summary

Using the data sources available through the DOH's websites and supplementing with internal data, outlined below is the state of tobacco utilization in Western New York and New York State across several indicators. The information shows how the region has several challenges to overcome in this area, and Project 4.b.i is especially needed. WNY will also participate to help the state reach its statewide goals of decreasing tobacco use.

Project Description

Tobacco use is New York's leading cause of preventable deaths. Oral Cancer, Lung Cancer, Heart Disease, Stroke, COPD, are among the consequences of tobacco addiction. By reducing the smoking rate in the area, not only could the utilization of healthcare fall but thousands of lives could be saved. Furthermore, substantial productivity is lost every year by smokers with health problems. The low-income and poor mental health populations are especially at risk of tobacco addiction.

According to Tobacco Free NY, the state spends $8.17 billion caring for people as a result of smoking, which comes out to $883/household. Medicaid alone spends $3.3B on treatment related to tobacco. Additionally, more than 25,000 people die annually across the state from their own smoking, and 570,000 New Yorkers have a serious disease directly tied to their smoking.

Because of these facts, the state has identified several goals to reduce smoking usage, decreasing tobacco use among school-age students, decreasing it among adults, and increasing the number of municipalities that restrict tobacco marketing.

Rationale

Table 35 shows the percentage of adults who smoke cigarettes in WNY compared to NY State. WNY has a higher proportion of smokers among adults compared to NY State and the goal for the state. Every county in Western New York exceeds the goal for the state as well as the state average.

5n. Reduce Premature Births (4.d.i)

Summary

Using the data sources available through the DOH's websites and supplementing with internal data, outlined below is the state of premature births in Western New York and New York State across several indicators. The information shows how the region has several challenges to reduce the prevalence of prematurity in WNY, and Project 4.d.i is especially needed.

Project Description

Babies born before the full term require increased medical attention both early on and throughout their lives. They are susceptible to a range of health problems relating to their under-developed organs. Furthermore, the health problems common among pre-term newborns often cause emotional stress among parents. Reducing the prevalence of pre-term births would help reduce the stress on the region's Health System.

Rationale

The data below show how Western New York compares to the rest of the state and provides information for the individual counties that comprise the region to get a sense of how the prevalent the issue is over Western New York.

Table 36 compares the average inpatient lengths of stay (LOS) for pre-mature vs. normal births and presents the ratio of premature/normal LOS for WNY. WNY overall has a higher ratio, indicating an average LOS that is longer for pre-mature births, compared to NY State.

Distressingly, the table shows that premature newborns are in the hospital 7-8 times as long as normal newborns, and during their stays they require much more medical attention than do the full-term newborns, so the costs to Medicaid would be even higher (than 7-8 times). Any effort to decrease the proportion of premature newborns would substantially benefit the newborns, their parents, and the healthcare system.

6. Resource Inventory

Assessing regional proximity of health care resources

Many factors influence an individual's access to health care services and community support. One of the most important is the simple geographic proximity of providers to the populations they serve. This analysis, therefore, attempts to show where services are located in relation to the residents who use them, especially those insured by Medicaid.

The major observation to be made for Western New York is simply that health care resources tend to be concentrated in center cities and their suburbs while they are relatively sparse in rural areas. Services are most frequently located and most densely concentrated where the most people are. Rural areas, with fewer people, have proximate access to fewer providers. The key question is whether those resources are proportionate to the need.

The greatest concentration of health care providers for acute care, primary care, and mental and behavioral care are in the region's two largest cities, Buffalo and Niagara Falls. With the exception of primary care, the greatest concentration of "safety net" providers – those with a significant share of volume with Medicaid patients – are also in the metropolitan core.

Rural residents typically find themselves farther from needed services than their urban counterparts. Even residents near small cities in rural counties may be more distant from providers than residents in the metropolitan area. How do we assess whether or not these communities are underserved?

This analysis considers the distance of providers from population combined with the ratio of providers to population. Is the supply of providers big enough? is it close enough? There's a more extensive explanation of the methodology below. The short answer is that in many cases small cities in the outlying counties as well as rural areas are relatively underserved. Yet this analysis will suggest that these gaps in proximity to services might be addressed with the addition of only a few providers if positioned strategically in the region.

Methodology

The following analysis uses proximity as a proxy for access to find which areas within Western New York have relatively low or high access to certain types of health care providers. A proximity score based on the number of providers per population and their relative distance to the population is calculated for each ZIP code for a key set of provider types. The proximity score for each ZIP code is determined by counting the number of providers per population within specified linear distances of each ZIP code's center of population, weighting them based on their distance from the zip code and adding them together (see formula below).

Where:

a = # of providers within 2 miles (per 100,000 people);
 b = # of providers within 2-5 miles (per 100,000 people);
 c = # of providers within 5-10 miles (per 100,000 people); and
 d = # of providers within 10-20 miles (per 100,000 people).

For example, this means that one provider within two miles of a ZIP code's population center is equivalent to twenty providers within twenty miles of that ZIP's population center. Also, if one ZIP code has a large population and another has a small population, but the number and distances to providers are equal, the ZIP code with the lower population will produce a higher proximity score. After initial scoring, all 198 included ZIP codes are ranked on a 0-100 scale, with lower numbers indicating lower proximities to health care providers.

The analysis is performed for key types of health care providers: (1) hospitals, (2) Safety Net primary care providers, (3) Safety Net Primary Care providers, (4) Safety Net mental health care providers, (5) non-Safety Net mental health care providers, (6) Safety Net behavioral health care providers, (7) non-Safety Net behavioral health care providers, and (8) all specialty care providers.

A different method is used to measure proximity to hospitals. This simply measures the linear distance of each ZIP code's center of population to the nearest acute care hospital. ZIP codes are sorted by these distances and ranks are assigned to each ZIP code, where greater distances from the ZIP code to the nearest hospital indicate lower proximities.

The analysis does not account for health care providers beyond the eight-county area of Western New York and therefore may underestimate the proximity to health care providers for ZIP codes near the borders of the region, especially along the eastern border.

These findings are discussed in further detail on the following pages and in an appendix to this report. In the pages that immediately follow, we show maps that indicate the relative ranking of ZIP codes for proximity to providers in several key categories. As with other maps and tables in this report, green is good (more proximate supply) and red is bad (less proximate supply).

The appendix to this report includes an exhaustive listing of providers, including community support resources, organized by category and mapped across the region with a narrative discussion of key findings.

Hospitals

Acute care hospitals in Western New York are concentrated around population centers. Of the 42 acute care hospitals in the region, more than half (25) are located in the region's two metropolitan counties, Erie and Niagara. This concentration leads to higher proximity scores for ZIP codes in the cities of Buffalo, Niagara Falls, and also in their adjacent suburbs, which have lower concentrations of Medicaid enrollees.

In the region's more rural counties, cities like Jamestown, Olean and Batavia also have hospitals and show relatively high proximity scores. However, the dispersed populations just beyond these centers are the most underserved by hospitals in Western New York. This is most apparent in the northern swath of Allegany County and the southern edge of Wyoming County, which includes the highest intensity of the relatively low proximity scores across the region.

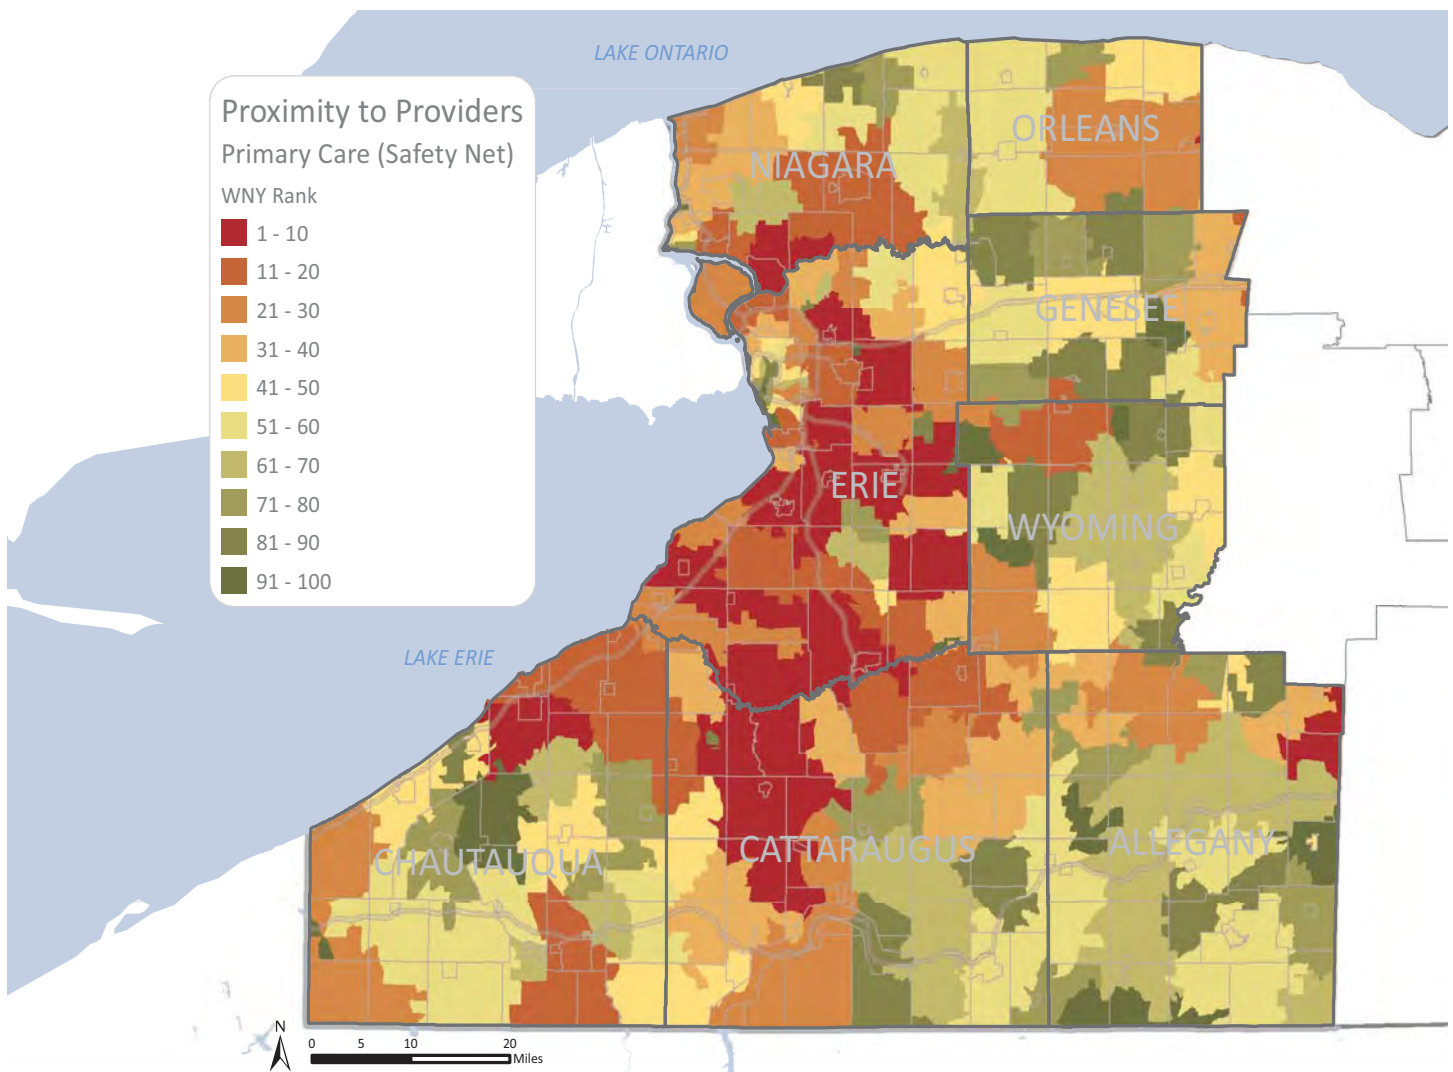

In sum, the map confirms the commonly-held assumption that rural populations are more isolated from, and therefore have poorer access to hospitals, than their urban counterparts. Unlike all subsequent assessments, this proximity measure is based solely on distance and does not factor in for the number of people in each ZIP code and thus may overstate low access to hospitals for rural populations.

Safety Net Primary Care Providers

Safety Net primary care providers are also concentrated in the region's cities, while other places with relatively high population densities, like the suburbs of Buffalo, have a comparatively small number of facilities offering Safety Net Primary care. Although these towns may have one or two Safety Net primary care providers nearby, and also may be within twenty miles of several others in nearby cities, they hold many residents and, therefore, yield lower proximity scores. However, since these towns have many non-Safety Net primary doctors and generally more affluent populations, low proximity to Safety Net doctors in these places may not be as problematic as it is for rural populations on the southern and eastern borders of Erie County and wide stretches of Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, and Niagara counties where there are higher proportions of low-income residents and fewer Safety Net providers.

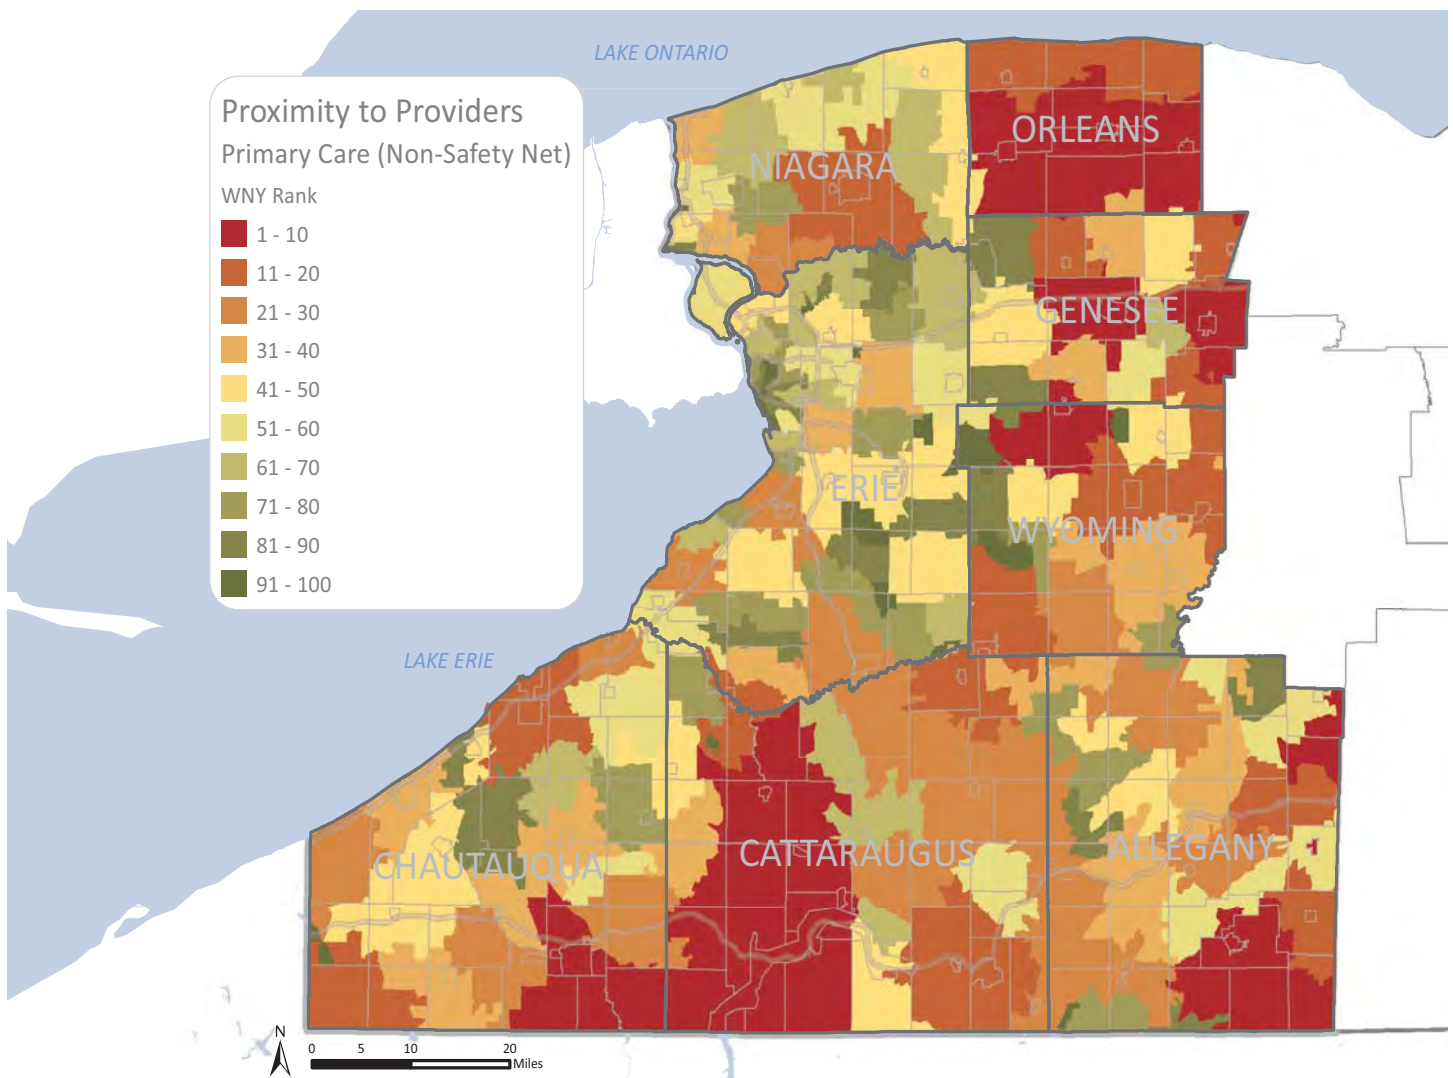

Many of Western New York's rural ZIP codes show high measures of proximity to Safety Net primary care providers even though providers are dispersed broadly throughout these communities. This is partly due to the low population in these locations, but also because Safety Net primary care providers here, though few, are strategically scattered in rural centers, like Wellsville, Albion, Warsaw and Arcade, that are commonly within a reasonable distance of most of the surrounding rural populations.

Non-Safety Net Primary Care Providers

Even while accounting for their smaller populations in the proximity score, rural ZIP codes still generate the lowest proximity scores for non-Safety Net primary care providers. For instance, all ZIP codes within Orleans County, which has only four non-Safety Net primary care providers within its borders, fall in the bottom twenty percent of the region's ZIP codes on this measure. Many ZIP codes in other rural counties also produce low proximity scores for non-Safety Net primary care providers, including those within cities like Jamestown, Batavia and Salamanca.

The communities where low access to primary care is most severe lie in western Cattaraugus County, especially zip codes 14719, and 14755 which fall within the bottom ten percent of proximity scores for both Safety Net and non-Safety Net primary care providers. Conversely, many suburban areas that received low proximity scores for Safety Net primary care providers reveal high, or at least fair, proximity scores for non-Safety Net providers. And in Niagara County, Lockport and North Tonawanda ZIP codes that score relatively low on this measure also showed low scores of proximity to Safety Net primary care providers.

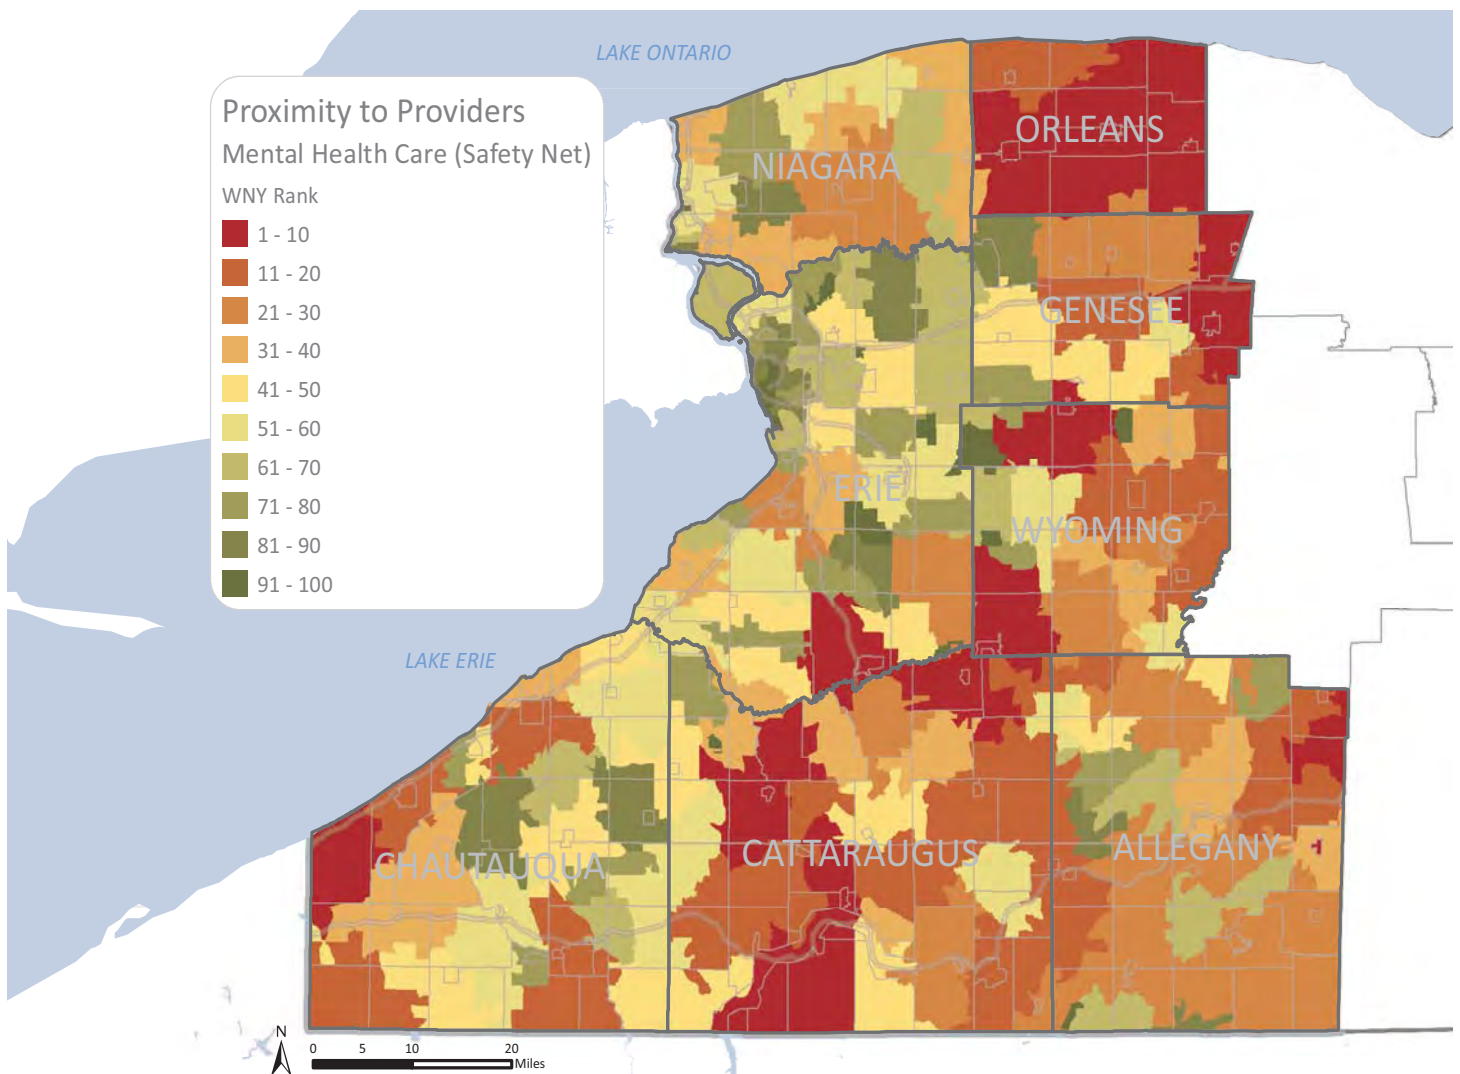

Safety Net Mental Health Care Providers

The relative proximity to mental health care providers reveals a similar general trend as proximity to other key providers – high access in urban areas and low access in rural areas, which remains true even after factoring for population size. Many of the most densely populated zip codes within Western New York, which also hold the largest concentrations of those in need of mental health support, have the best geographic access to mental care providers. However, some zip codes in the metropolitan counties of Western New York, around Springville, Hamburg and Lockport for instance, do not own as many mental health care providers within close proximity as zip codes in Buffalo and Niagara Falls.

Low access to mental health care providers is most extreme in rural counties. Orleans County again shows the lowest overall access with all of its zip codes falling within the bottom twenty percent of proximity scores across the region. Low access is slightly less pervasive in other rural counties, but many cities and villages in these counties – places with relatively high concentrations of people in need of mental support services – rank as having the lowest access to providers relative to the region. For instance, the zip codes of Jamestown, Salamanca, Wellsville, Attica, Batavia and Medina all fall within the bottom ten percent of Safety Net mental health care provider proximity scores. Though these places may have one provider close by, since they are surrounded by vast stretches without any mental health providers, and since they have relatively high populations, they have particularly low access to mental health support.

Non-Safety Net Mental Health Care Providers

Relative proximity to non-Safety Net mental health care providers shows the same general pattern as for Safety Net providers: closer proximity in metropolitan counties than in rural areas. However, there are some differences. While most of the rural areas with poor proximity to Safety Net mental health care resources also score low on this proximity measure, some places, like parts of Allegany and Wyoming counties, show reasonable proximity to non-Safety Net mental health care providers. Yet all ZIP codes within Orleans County fall near the bottom of this proximity measure once again, as does much of the northern half of Allegany County, parts of Chautauqua County (e.g., Dunkirk) and ZIP code 14779 in Cattaraugus County (containing Salamanca and the Allegany Reservation).

The City of Buffalo is the best-served by mental health care providers, even after accounting for its large population. Niagara Falls is also in close proximity to non-Safety Net mental health care providers, but the bulk of Niagara County, especially the eastern half, reveal low proximity scores for these providers. Meanwhile, most suburban residents in Erie and Niagara counties are generally within reasonable proximity to these providers. In sum, this map shows that, even though rural areas have less people overall, because providers are so dispersed, they in fact contain more people beyond close proximity to mental health care providers.

Safety Net Behavioral Health Care Providers

As is the case for mental health care providers, proximity to behavioral health care providers again underscores the urban-rural dichotomy. The cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls, which contain among the highest concentrations of people in need of addiction and abuse treatment services, have the highest proximity to Safety Net behavioral health care providers. This high proximity extends to most surrounding villages and suburbs in Erie and Niagara counties, although some towns and villages like Hamburg, Angola, Brant and Springville, do have low proximity to Safety Net behavioral health resources.

Rural counties again generate the most extreme low proximity scores for a key provider type. In the case of Safety Net behavioral health care providers, the lowest proximity scores concentrate in rural towns of Chautauqua, Cattaraugus and Wyoming counties bordering the southern portion of Erie County. Orleans County shows strikingly low relative proximity to yet another key type of provider. The bulk of Allegany County has relatively high proximity, in part due to low population in this area, while most of Genesee County has somewhat low proximity to Safety Net behavioral health care providers.

Non-Safety Net Behavioral Health Care Providers

Looking at relative proximity to non-Safety Net behavioral health care providers tells a slightly different story of access to health care in Western New York. While urban areas, particularly Buffalo and Niagara Falls, still show some of the highest proximity scores for this provider category, many rural areas, like most of Allegany County, also rank high. Conversely, though notable ZIP codes in rural areas again score low on this proximity measure, some of the lowest proximity scores appear in ZIP codes within the region’s metropolitan counties (e.g., around Springville, Hamburg and Lockport).

The most severely low proximity scores for non-Safety Net behavioral health care providers seem to converge on population centers within the more rural counties of Western New York. For instance, Attica, Batavia, Dunkirk, Fredonia and Westfield all lie within ZIP codes ranking in the bottom ten percent of the region for this measure. Orleans County ZIP codes, though not among the most extremely low proximity scores, show relatively low access overall for yet another key provider category.

Specialty Care Providers

Though this measure cannot be used to assess relative proximity to specific types of specialty care providers, the map does prove a basic and powerful point – specialty care providers are generally much harder to reach for rural residents than for their urban counterparts. In fact, the urban-rural dichotomy of proximity to health care is most clearly shown in this metric evaluating relative access to all specialty care providers. Only a few ZIP codes within Erie and Niagara counties (e.g., Lockport, Hamburg, Somerset and Springville) fall outside of the top fifty percent on this proximity score. Meanwhile, only 31 (27%) of the 111 ZIP codes lying primarily within the six most rural counties of Western New York rank better than the bottom fifty percent.

The area with the highest proximity to specialty care providers within Western New York, in general, falls in the City of Buffalo. Concentrations of specialty care providers in Niagara Falls, Amherst, Clarence and Orchard Park also produce high proximity scores for these locales. Areas with the most severely low proximities to specialty care providers lie within rural counties, even after controlling for lower populations here. This includes Albion and its surrounding ZIP code while all other ZIP codes primarily within Orleans County rank in the bottom thirty percent of this score, again highlighting the low access to providers of all types for Orleans County residents. Batavia's ZIP code scores in the bottom twenty percent for proximity to specialty care providers, as do the ZIP codes of Le Roy, Wellsville, Attica, and Arcade. Most of the other ZIP codes with the lowest proximity to specialty care providers are overwhelmingly rural and sparsely populated which further stresses the severity of limited access to specialty care in these areas.

Resource Inventory

Assessing regional proximity of health care resources

Many factors influence an individual's access to health care services and community support. One of the most important is the simple geographic proximity of providers to the populations they serve. This analysis, therefore, attempts to show where services are located in relation to the residents who use them, especially those insured by Medicaid.

The major observation to be made for Western New York is simply that health care resources tend to be concentrated in center cities and their suburbs while they are relatively sparse in rural areas. Services are most frequently located and most densely concentrated where the most people are. Rural areas, with fewer people, have proximate access to fewer providers. The key question is whether those resources are proportionate to the need.

The greatest concentration of health care providers for acute care, primary care, and mental and behavioral care are in the region's two largest cities, Buffalo and Niagara Falls. With the exception of primary care, the greatest concentration of "safety net" providers – those with a significant share of volume with Medicaid patients – are also in the metropolitan core.

Rural residents typically find themselves farther from needed services than their urban counterparts. Even residents near small cities in rural counties may be more distant from providers than residents in the metropolitan area. How do we assess whether or not these communities are underserved?

This analysis considers the distance of providers from population combined with the ratio of providers to population. Is the supply of providers big enough? is it close enough? There's a more extensive explanation of the methodology below. The short answer is that in many cases small cities in the outlying counties as well as rural areas are relatively underserved. Yet this analysis will suggest that these gaps in proximity to services might be addressed with the addition of only a few providers if positioned strategically in the region.

Methodology

The following analysis uses proximity as a proxy for access to find which areas within Western New York have relatively low or high access to certain types of health care providers. A proximity score based on the number of providers per population and their relative distance to the population is calculated for each ZIP code for a key set of provider types. The proximity score for each ZIP code is determined by counting the number of providers per population within specified linear distances of each ZIP code's center of population, weighting them based on their distance from the zip code and adding them together (see formula below).

Where:

a = # of providers within 2 miles (per 100,000 people);
b = # of providers within 2-5 miles (per 100,000 people);
c = # of providers within 5-10 miles (per 100,000 people); and
d = # of providers within 10-20 miles (per 100,000 people).

For example, this means that one provider within two miles of a ZIP code's population center is equivalent to twenty providers within twenty miles of that ZIP's population center. Also, if one ZIP code has a large population and another has a small population, but the number and distances to providers are equal, the ZIP code with the lower population will produce a higher proximity score. After initial scoring, all 198 included ZIP codes are ranked on a 0-100 scale, with lower numbers indicating lower proximities to health care providers.

The analysis is performed for key types of health care providers: (1) hospitals, (2) Safety Net primary care providers, (3) Safety Net Primary Care providers, (4) Safety Net mental health care providers, (5) non-Safety Net mental health care providers, (6) Safety Net behavioral health care providers, (7) non-Safety Net behavioral health care providers, and (8) all specialty care providers.

A different method is used to measure proximity to hospitals. This simply measures the linear distance of each ZIP code's center of population to the nearest acute care hospital. ZIP codes are sorted by these distances and ranks are assigned to each ZIP code, where greater distances from the ZIP code to the nearest hospital indicate lower proximities.

The analysis does not account for health care providers beyond the eight-county area of Western New York and therefore may underestimate the proximity to health care providers for ZIP codes near the borders of the region, especially along the eastern border.

These findings are discussed in further detail on the following pages and in an appendix to this report. In the pages that immediately follow, we show maps that indicate the relative ranking of ZIP codes for proximity to providers in several key categories. As with other maps and tables in this report, green is good (more proximate supply) and red is bad (less proximate supply).

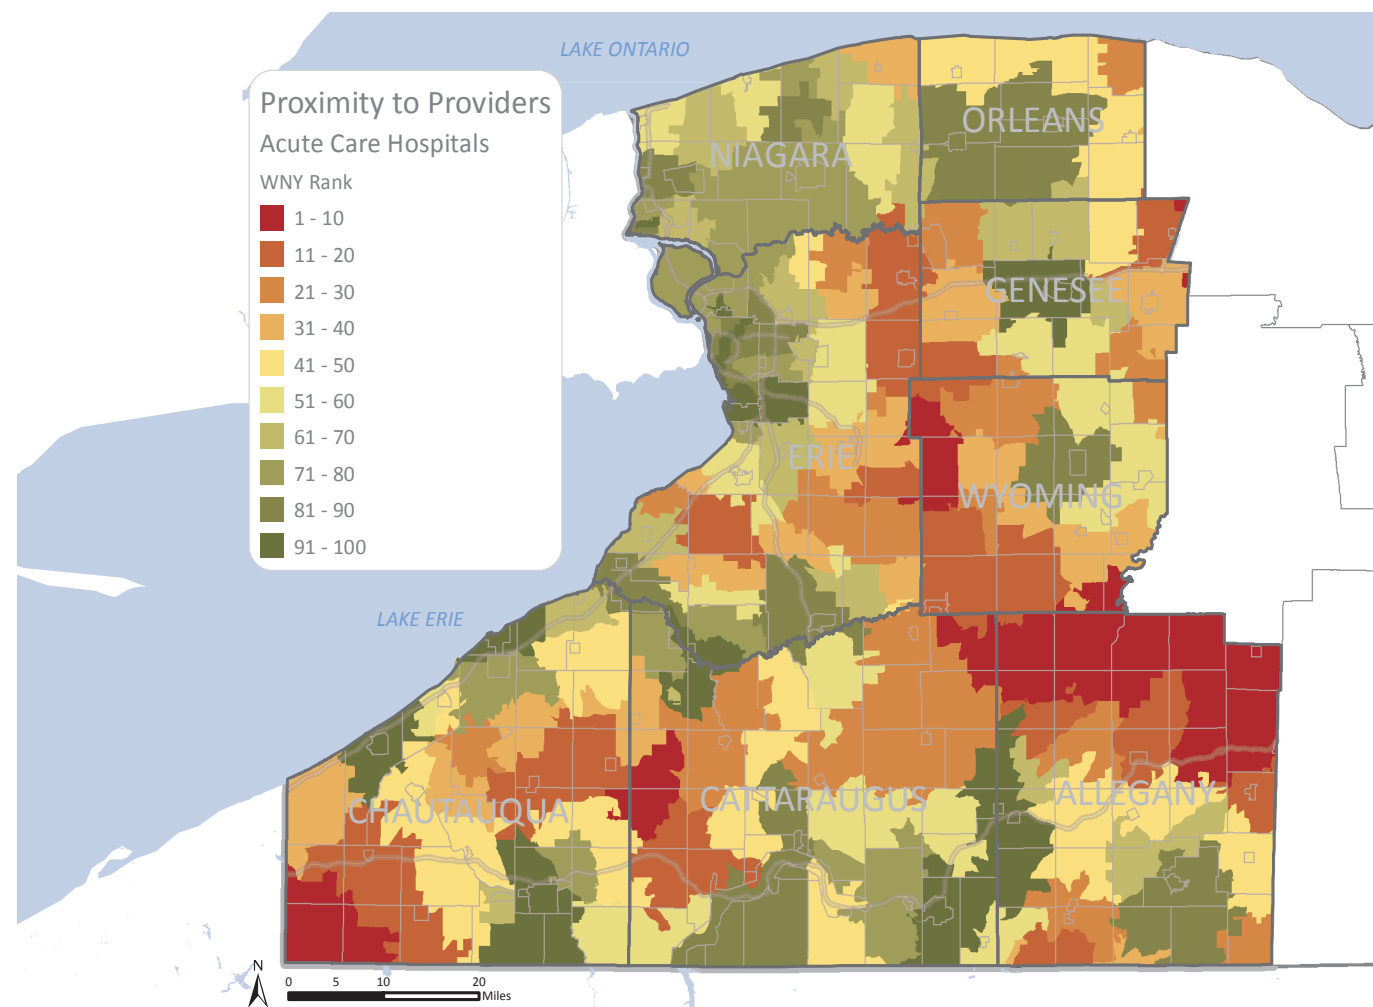

The appendix to this report includes an exhaustive listing of providers, including community support resources, organized by category and mapped across the region with a narrative discussion of key findings.

Hospitals

Acute care hospitals in Western New York are concentrated around population centers. Of the 42 acute care hospitals in the region, more than half (25) are located in the region's two metropolitan counties, Erie and Niagara. This concentration leads to higher proximity scores for ZIP codes in the cities of Buffalo, Niagara Falls, and also in their adjacent suburbs, which have lower concentrations of Medicaid enrollees.

In the region's more rural counties, cities like Jamestown, Olean and Batavia also have hospitals and show relatively high proximity scores. However, the dispersed populations just beyond these centers are the most underserved by hospitals in Western New York. This is most apparent in the northern swath of Allegany County and the southern edge of Wyoming County, which includes the highest intensity of the relatively low proximity scores across the region.

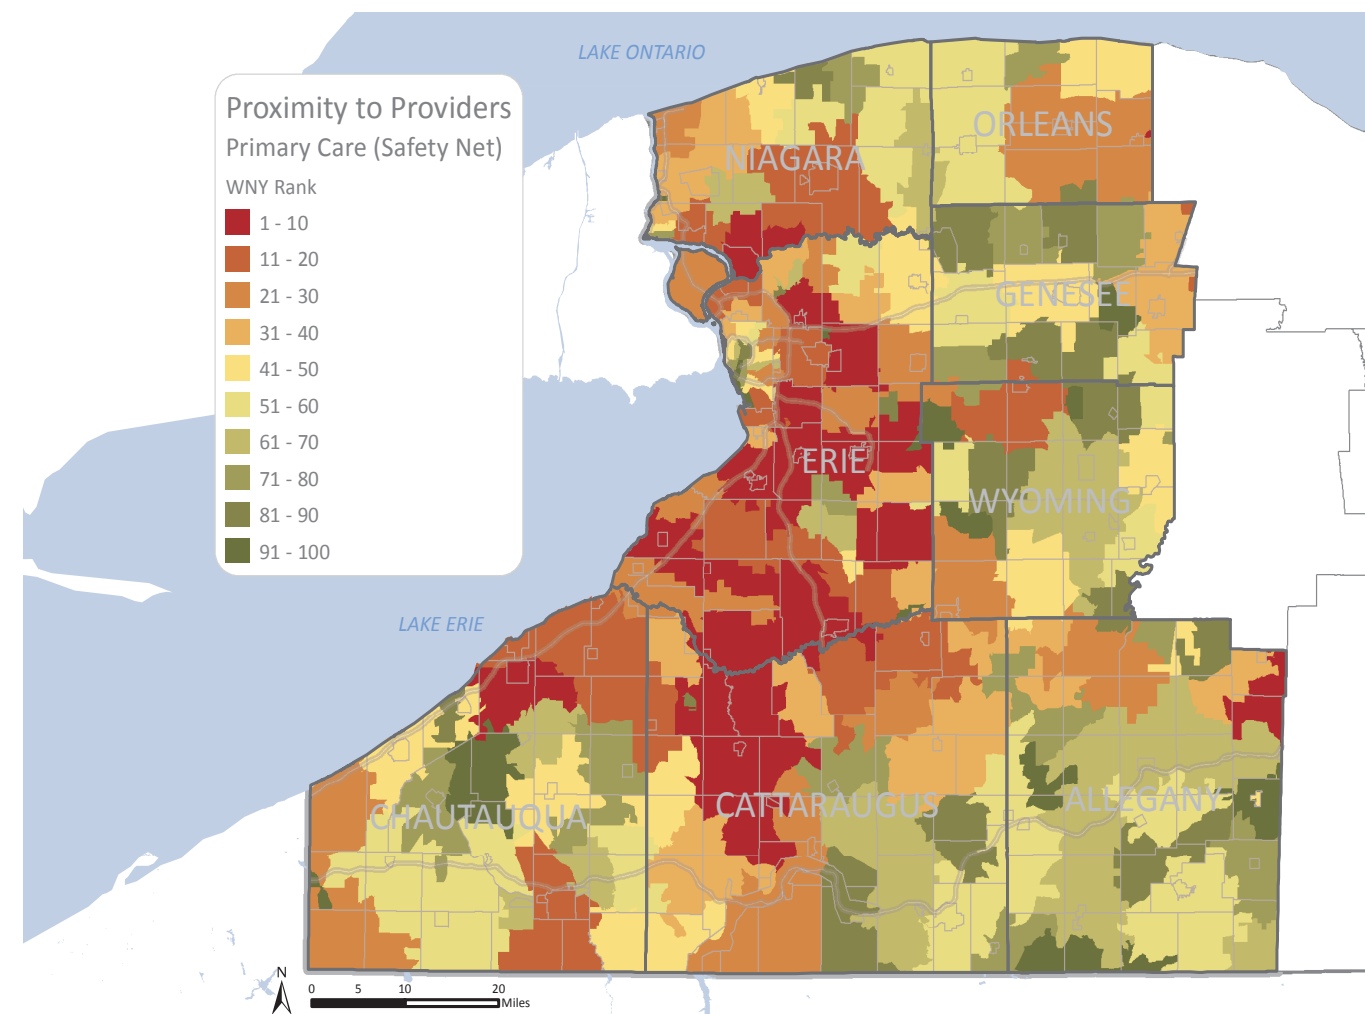

In sum, the map confirms the commonly-held assumption that rural populations are more isolated from, and therefore have poorer access to hospitals, than their urban counterparts. Unlike all subsequent assessments, this proximity measure is based solely on distance and does not factor in for the number of people in each ZIP code and thus may overstate low access to hospitals for rural populations.

Safety Net Primary Care Providers

Safety Net primary care providers are also concentrated in the region's cities, while other places with relatively high population densities, like the suburbs of Buffalo, have a comparatively small number of facilities offering Safety Net Primary care. Although these towns may have one or two Safety Net primary care providers nearby, and also may be within twenty miles of several others in nearby cities, they hold many residents and, therefore, yield lower proximity scores. However, since these towns have many non-Safety Net primary doctors and generally more affluent populations, low proximity to Safety Net doctors in these places may not be as problematic as it is for rural populations on the southern and eastern borders of Erie County and wide stretches of Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, and Niagara counties where there are higher proportions of low-income residents and fewer Safety Net providers.

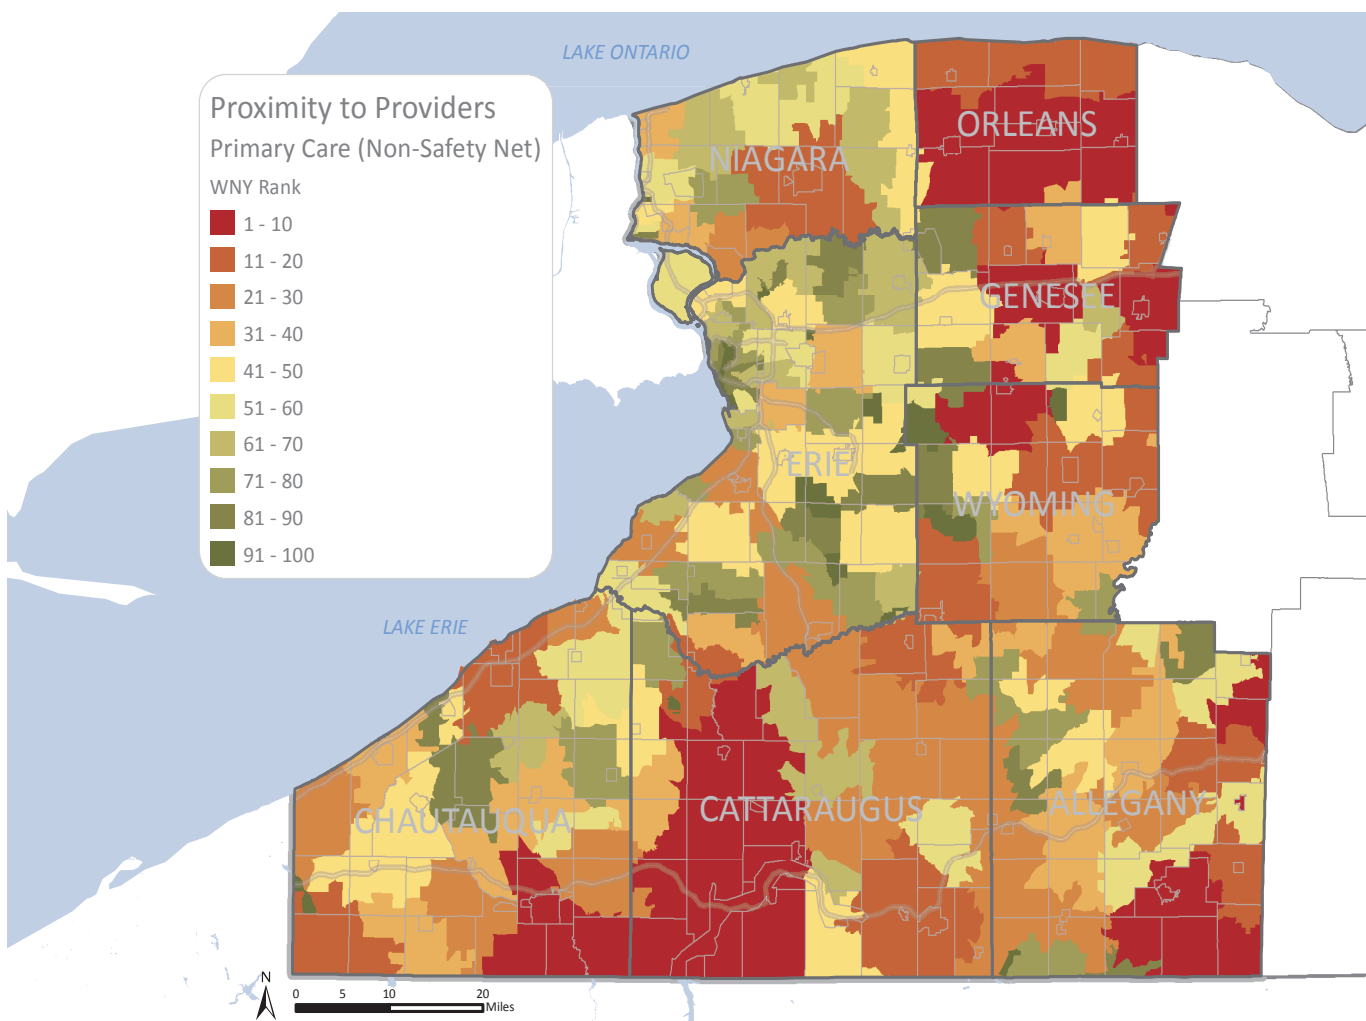

Many of Western New York's rural ZIP codes show high measures of proximity to Safety Net primary care providers even though providers are dispersed broadly throughout these communities. This is partly due to the low population in these locations, but also because Safety Net primary care providers here, though few, are strategically scattered in rural centers, like Wellsville, Albion, Warsaw and Arcade, that are commonly within a reasonable distance of most of the surrounding rural populations.

Non-Safety Net Primary Care Providers

Even while accounting for their smaller populations in the proximity score, rural ZIP codes still generate the lowest proximity scores for non-Safety Net primary care providers. For instance, all ZIP codes within Orleans County, which has only four non-Safety Net primary care providers within its borders, fall in the bottom twenty percent of the region's ZIP codes on this measure. Many ZIP codes in other rural counties also produce low proximity scores for non-Safety Net primary care providers, including those within cities like Jamestown, Batavia and Salamanca.

The communities where low access to primary care is most severe lie in western Cattaraugus County, especially zip codes 14719, and 14755 which fall within the bottom ten percent of proximity scores for both Safety Net and non-Safety Net primary care providers. Conversely, many suburban areas that received low proximity scores for Safety Net primary care providers reveal high, or at least fair, proximity scores for non-Safety Net providers. And in Niagara County, Lockport and North Tonawanda ZIP codes that score relatively low on this measure also showed low scores of proximity to Safety Net primary care providers.

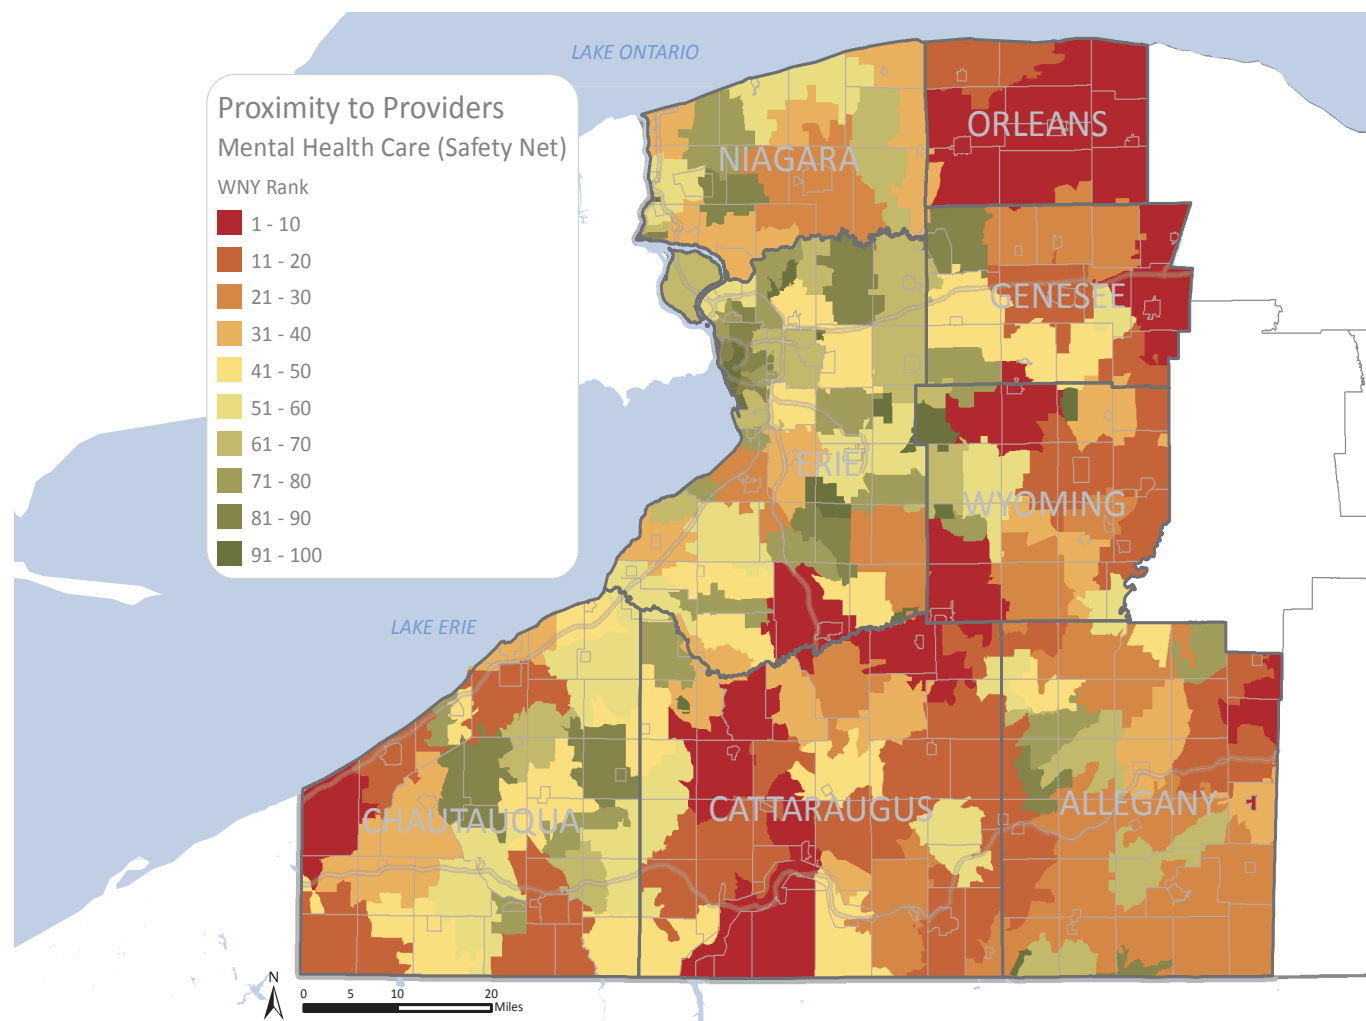

Safety Net Mental Health Care Providers

The relative proximity to mental health care providers reveals a similar general trend as proximity to other key providers – high access in urban areas and low access in rural areas, which remains true even after factoring for population size. Many of the most densely populated zip codes within Western New York, which also hold the largest concentrations of those in need of mental health support, have the best geographic access to mental care providers. However, some zip codes in the metropolitan counties of Western New York, around Springville, Hamburg and Lockport for instance, do not own as many mental health care providers within close proximity as zip codes in Buffalo and Niagara Falls.

Low access to mental health care providers is most extreme in rural counties. Orleans County again shows the lowest overall access with all of its zip codes falling within the bottom twenty percent of proximity scores across the region. Low access is slightly less pervasive in other rural counties, but many cities and villages in these counties – places with relatively high concentrations of people in need of mental support services – rank as having the lowest access to providers relative to the region. For instance, the zip codes of Jamestown, Salamanca, Wellsville, Attica, Batavia and Medina all fall within the bottom ten percent of Safety Net mental health care provider proximity scores. Though these places may have one provider close by, since there are surrounded by vast stretches without any mental health providers, and since they have relatively high populations, they have particularly low access to mental health support.

Non-Safety Net Mental Health Care Providers

Relative proximity to non-Safety Net mental health care providers shows the same general pattern as for Safety Net providers: closer proximity in metropolitan counties than in rural areas. However, there are some differences. While most of the rural areas with poor proximity to Safety Net mental health care resources also score low on this proximity measure, some places, like parts of Allegany and Wyoming counties, show reasonable proximity to non-Safety Net mental health care providers. Yet all ZIP codes within Orleans County fall near the bottom of this proximity measure once again, as does much of the northern half of Allegany County, parts of Chautauqua County (e.g., Dunkirk) and ZIP code 14779 in Cattaraugus County (containing Salamanca and the Allegany Reservation).

The City of Buffalo is the best-served by mental health care providers, even after accounting for its large population. Niagara Falls is also in close proximity to non-Safety Net mental health care providers, but the bulk of Niagara County, especially the eastern half, reveal low proximity scores for these providers. Meanwhile, most suburban residents in Erie and Niagara counties are generally within reasonable proximity to these providers. In sum, this map shows that, even though rural areas have less people overall, because providers are so dispersed, they in fact contain more people beyond close proximity to mental health care providers.

Safety Net Behavioral Health Care Providers

As is the case for mental health care providers, proximity to behavioral health care providers again underscores the urban-rural dichotomy. The cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls, which contain among the highest concentrations of people in need of addiction and abuse treatment services, have the highest proximity to Safety Net behavioral health care providers. This high proximity extends to most surrounding villages and suburbs in Erie and Niagara counties, although some towns and villages like Hamburg, Angola, Brant and Springville, do have low proximity to Safety Net behavioral health resources.

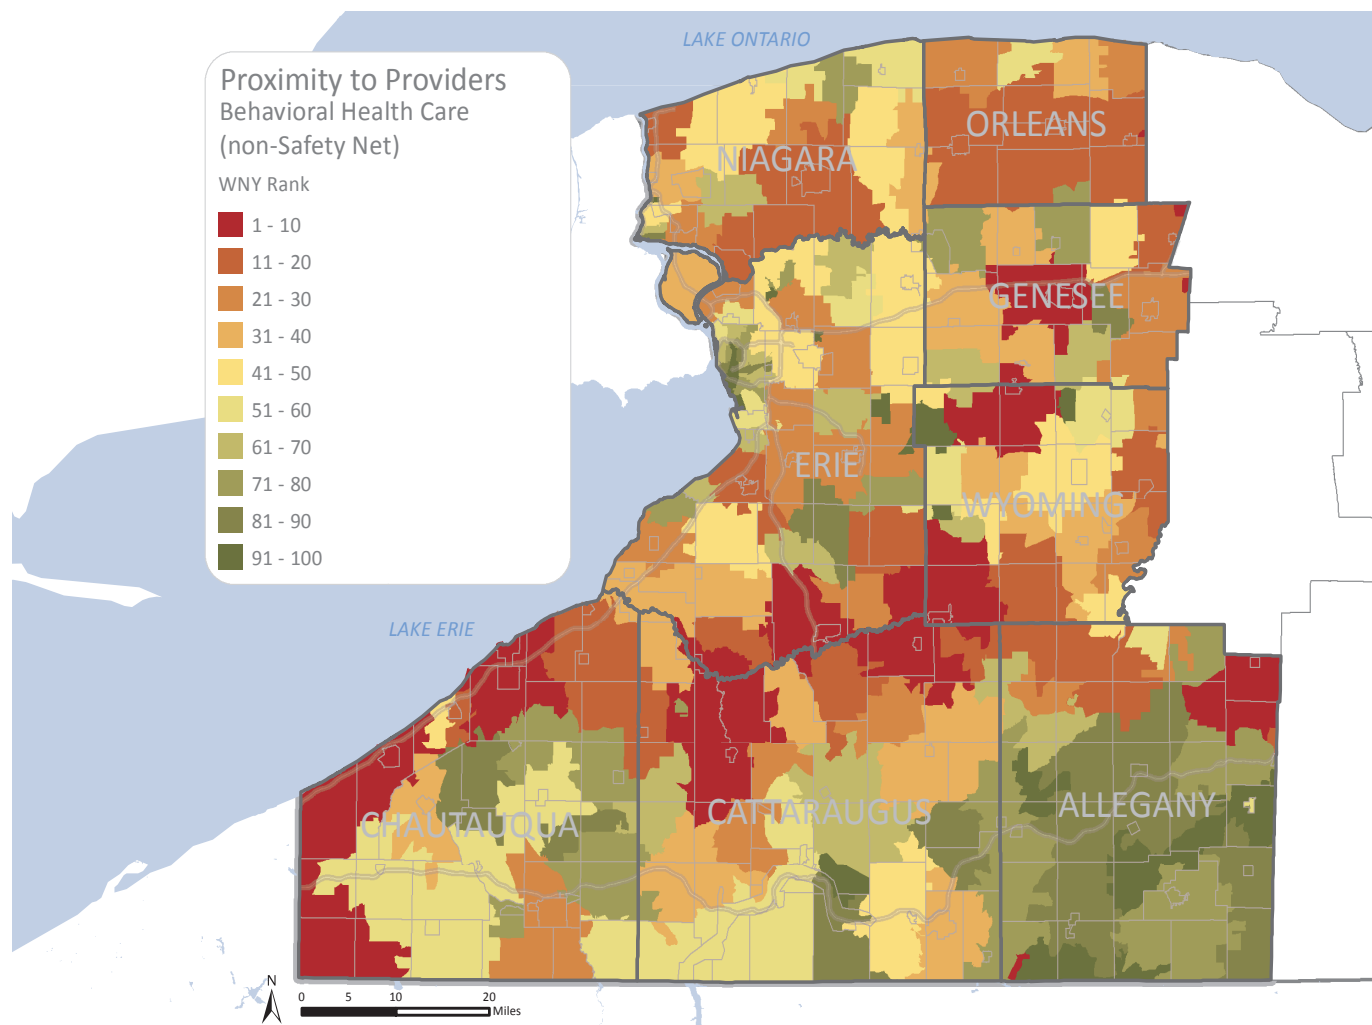

Rural counties again generate the most extreme low proximity scores for a key provider type. In the case of Safety Net behavioral health care providers, the lowest proximity scores concentrate in rural towns of Chautauqua, Cattaraugus and Wyoming counties bordering the southern portion of Erie County. Orleans County shows strikingly low relative proximity to yet another key type of provider. The bulk of Allegany County has relatively high proximity, in part due to low population in this area, while most of Genesee County has somewhat low proximity to Safety Net behavioral health care providers.

Non-Safety Net Behavioral Health Care Providers

Looking at relative proximity to non-Safety Net behavioral health care providers tells a slightly different story of access to health care in Western New York. While urban areas, particularly Buffalo and Niagara Falls, still show some of the highest proximity scores for this provider category, many rural areas, like most of Allegany County, also rank high. Conversely, though notable ZIP codes in rural areas again score low on this proximity measure, some of the lowest proximity scores appear in ZIP codes within the region's metropolitan counties (e.g., around Springville, Hamburg and Lockport).

The most severely low proximity scores for non-Safety Net behavioral health care providers seem to converge on population centers within the more rural counties of Western New York. For instance, Attica, Batavia, Dunkirk, Fredonia and Westfield all lie within ZIP codes ranking in the bottom ten percent of the region for this measure. Orleans County ZIP codes, though not among the most extremely low proximity scores, show relatively low access overall for yet another key provider category.

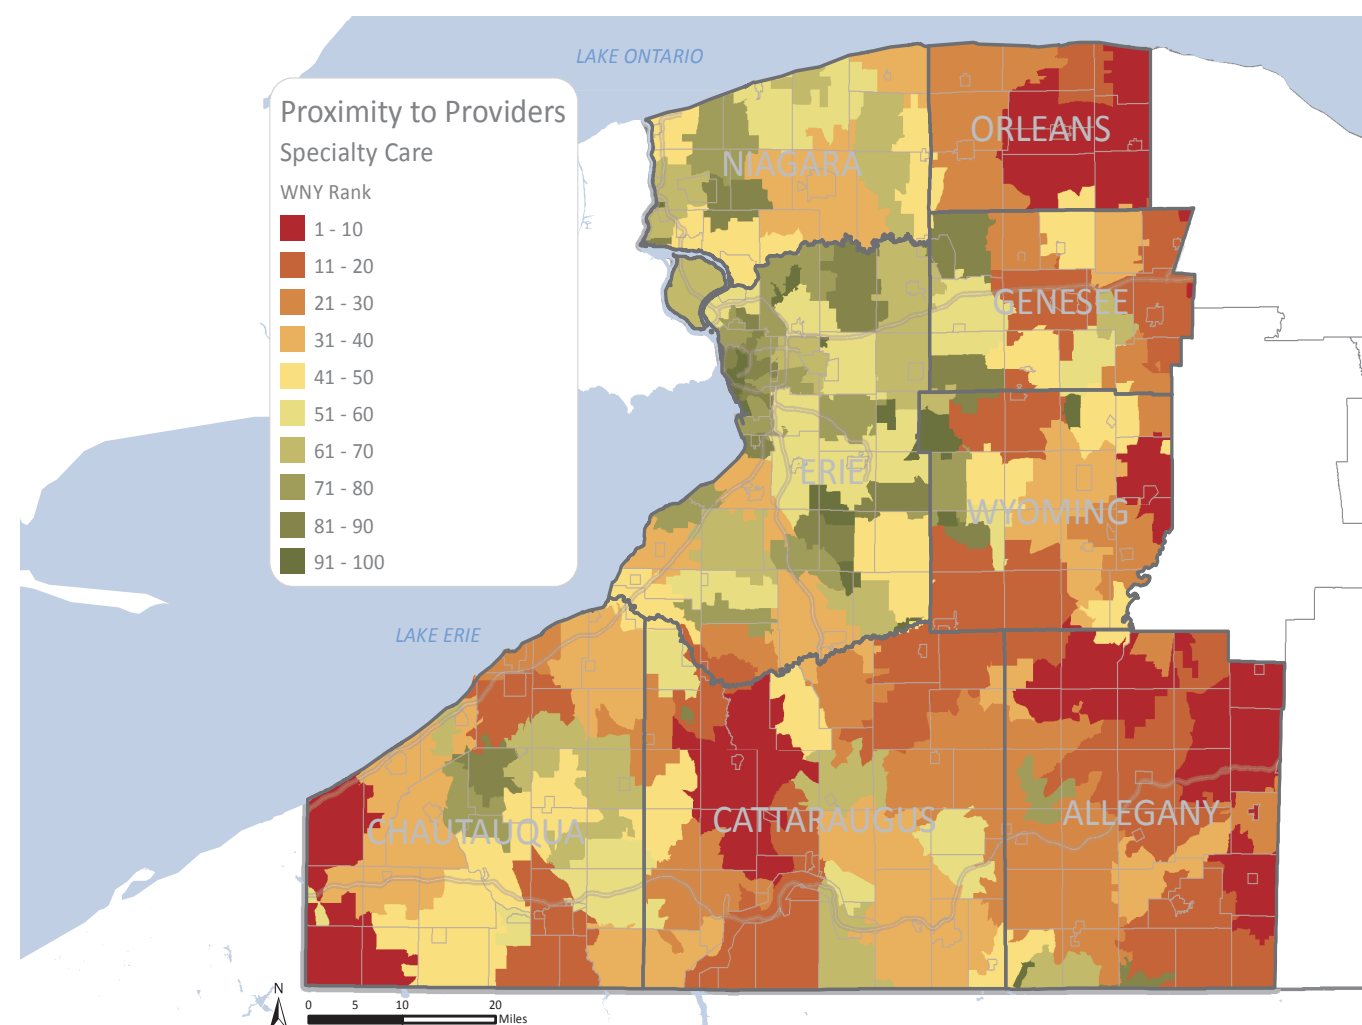

Specialty Care Providers

Though this measure cannot be used to assess relative proximity to specific types of specialty care providers, the map does prove a basic and powerful point – specialty care providers are generally much harder to reach for rural residents than for their urban counterparts. In fact, the urban-rural dichotomy of proximity to health care is most clearly shown in this metric evaluating relative access to all specialty care providers. Only a few ZIP codes within Erie and Niagara counties (e.g., Lockport, Hamburg, Somerset and Springville) fall outside of the top fifty percent on this proximity score. Meanwhile, only 31 (27%) of the 111 ZIP codes lying primarily within the six most rural counties of Western New York rank better than the bottom fifty percent.

The area with the highest proximity to specialty care providers within Western New York, in general, falls in the City of Buffalo. Concentrations of specialty care providers in Niagara Falls, Amherst, Clarence and Orchard Park also produce high proximity scores for these locales. Areas with the most severely low proximities to specialty care providers lie within rural counties, even after controlling for lower populations here. This includes Albion and its surrounding ZIP code while all other ZIP codes primarily within Orleans County rank in the bottom thirty percent of this score, again highlighting the low access to providers of all types for Orleans County residents. Batavia's ZIP code scores in the bottom twenty percent for proximity to specialty care providers, as do the ZIP codes of Le Roy, Wellsville, Attica, and Arcade. Most of the other ZIP codes with the lowest proximity to specialty care providers are overwhelmingly rural and sparsely populated which further stresses the severity of limited access to specialty care in these areas.

a. Safety Net Providers

Safety-net providers and provider sites account for one out of ten of the total or 1,220 altogether. By definition, these are providers that serve proportionally greater volumes of vulnerable populations. Those covered by Medicaid, the dual eligible and the uninsured generally represent at least 30-35% of patient volumes for safety-net providers.

Approximately two-thirds are providers of health care – physicians, federally qualified health centers (FQHC), laboratories, mental health clinics, and others – and the balance of community-based resources such as youth and family programs, housing resources and education and training providers.

More than not are located in Erie and Niagara Counties, generally where poverty and Medicaid concentrations are highest, as in Niagara Falls, Buffalo and inner-ring suburbs. Smaller but notable clusters exist in smaller urban areas like Jamestown (Chautauqua County), Olean (Cattaraugus County) and Batavia (Genesee County).

Health Care Providers

Hospitals and Acute Care Centers

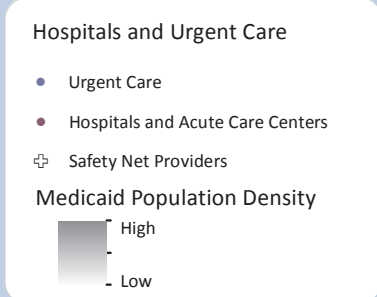

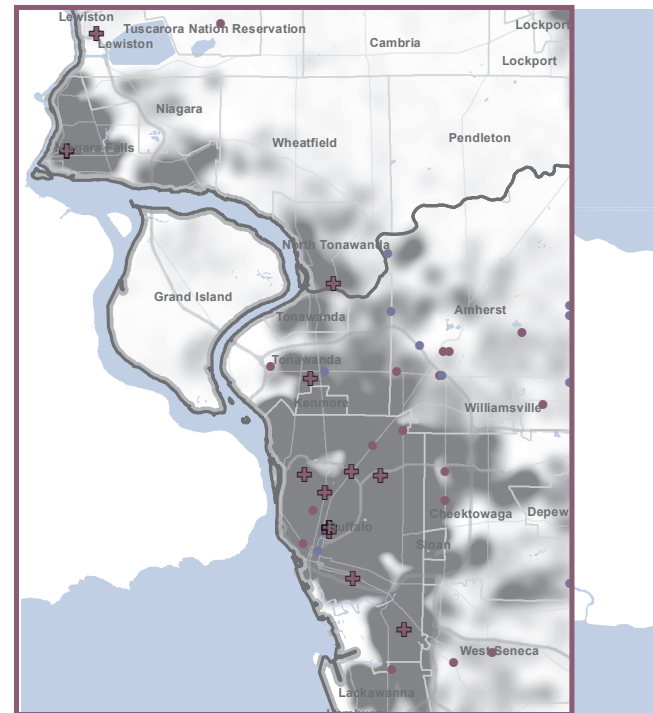

Hospitals, urgent care centers and ambulatory surgical centers are present across the region at seventy-four locations. With 42 hospitals, this is the most common kind of immediate-care facility in Western New York. It includes specialized hospitals such as Children’s Hospital in Buffalo.

Across facilities, 216 is the median number of employees, reflecting sites that are large hubs for the provision of urgent and surgical health care.

Almost three-quarters of the total are located in Erie and Niagara Counties, concentrated in urban settings where poverty and Medicaid population densities are greatest.

Outside the metropolitan core, up to six hospitals, ambulatory surgery sites and/or urgent care centers exist in each of the other six counties. The greatest number is in Chautauqua County while Wyoming has only one (Wyoming County Community Hospital).

A safety-net site exists in all counties of the region. Most safety-net providers are hospitals; only one is an urgent care center. Safety-net providers are ones where about a third or more of patient volumes reflect the uninsured or those covered by Medicaid. Safety-net facilities account for about a third of the total, indicative of the acute stage hospital setting where many Medicaid patients get treatment.

Primary Care

Over 730 primary care service sites were identified. The group includes individual physicians, family practices, pediatric practices, federally qualified health centers and more. Most are relatively small private practices with a median of three employees. More than not provide services in Erie and Niagara County only, where the majority are located.

Despite the overall large number of providers, notable gaps in primary care exist across the region's geography, health care facilities and for some of the region's most vulnerable residents. Indicators show South Tier Counties in need of greater capacity. At least three-quarters or more of the entire population in Allegany, Cattaraugus and Chautauqua Counties has been identified as living in a primary health professional shortage area (HPSA), with insufficient provider numbers in the area of primary care relative to population need, according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Health Resources and Services Administration. This is true even though proximity to existing safety-net providers is high in many portions of this tri-county area.

In Genesee and Orleans Counties, shortages of primary care professionals exist not for all populations but for Medicaid-eligible residents. Genesee County is the only one out of the eight without a federally qualified health care center.

In Erie and Niagara Counties, shortages exist in Buffalo, Niagara Falls and Newfane, where traveling barriers are arguably greatest because of geographic distance from the metro core and/or the percentages of households in these areas that do not have access to a car.

Health Care Providers

Laboratories and Radiology

Locations offering laboratory and radiology services are common - over 1800 exist across Western New York. Most are integrated within a larger context of a doctor's office, clinic or hospital, for the convenience of patients and clinicians.

This service category represents about 15% of the total inventory of health and community-support resources.

Seven out of ten locations are in Erie County, concentrated in the City of Buffalo and surrounding suburbs. While at least one safety-net provider exists in every county, services are scarce in Allegany and Orleans where less than a half-dozen providers exist, generally where population densities are highest like in Fredonia, Jamestown, Olean, and Batavia.

Mental Health Providers

Exactly 245 mental health care providers and support organizations exist in the region. The group includes psychiatric centers, psychiatrists, peer support programs, mental health associations, outpatient counseling sites and more. Fourteen providers are certified by the NYS Office of Mental Health pursuant to Article 31 of the Mental Hygiene Law.

Two out of three are located in Erie County, concentrated in Buffalo and surrounding suburbs. Services are limited in other counties where about two dozen or fewer providers exist in each. In Orleans, only two were identified - a site for Mid Erie Mental Health Services and the Mental Health Association.

The relatively few providers outside the metropolitan core, relative to population numbers, has led to four counties in the region being designated as ones with a mental health professional shortage, according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Health Resources & Services Administration. These include Allegany, Cattaraugus, Orleans and Wyoming.

About one out of three providers - 81 altogether - are safety-net providers, providing services to relatively large proportions of Medicaid and uninsured individuals. At least one safety-net provider exists in every county, although the large concentration is in Erie County. Yet even this supply is insufficient to meet demand, as the City of Buffalo, along with Chautauqua County, has been designated as having a shortage of mental health professionals for Medicaid-eligible populations.

Developmentally Disabled

Exactly 135 organizations provide services - health, education, housing, counseling, advocacy and more - to individuals with developmental disabilities. Over three dozen sites are certified by the NYS Office for People with Developmental Disabilities (OPWDD) under Article 16 of the Mental Hygiene Law.

Many providers in this group have multiple locations, particularly People, Inc., Community Services for the Developmentally Disabled and the Arc. Among the 135 locations where services are provided, 58 reflect unique providers.

Two out of three provider locations are in Erie County, concentrated primarily in and around Buffalo where Medicaid population densities are highest. Each of the other counties has 10 or fewer providers. Genesee has the most.

50 of the total are safety-net providers, concentrated heavily in or near Buffalo. No safety-net providers exist in Orleans, Wyoming, Allegany or Cattaraugus, the most rural areas of the region.

Health Care Providers

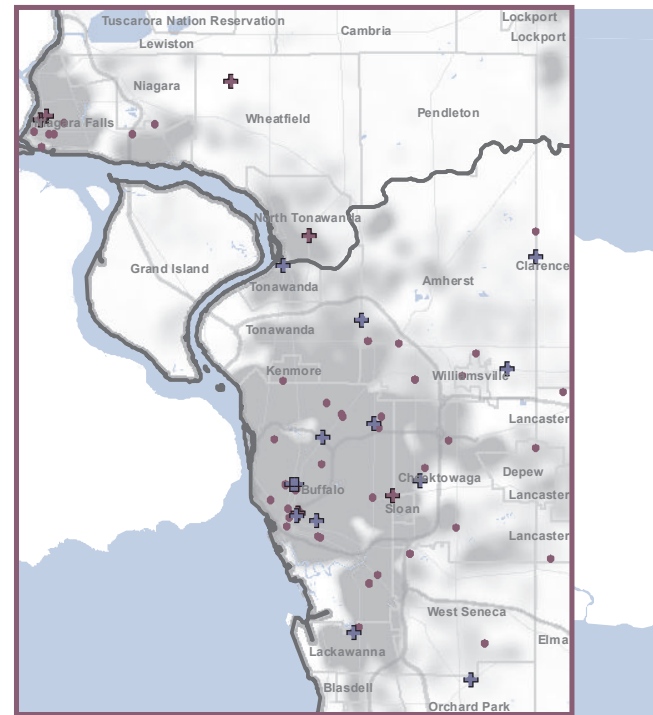

Behavioral Health

Exactly 125 behavioral health providers exist across Western New York. This group includes psychiatric treatment facilities, drug abuse and addiction treatment centers, and certified providers offering services under Article 32 of the Mental Hygiene Law with oversight by the NYS Office of Alcoholism and Substance Abuse (OASA).

In terms of employment, some of the largest of the group include Northpointe Council, WCA Hospital in Jamestown and Genesee Council on Alcoholism and Substance Abuse.

Six out of 10 providers are located in Erie and Niagara Counties, present where Medicaid population densities are most pronounced in urban cores, particularly Buffalo, Niagara Falls and Lockport. In more rural portions of these metropolitan counties, nearby options are limited.

Behavioral health options are also notably more limited in Cattaraugus, Genesee, Orleans, Wyoming Counties where under 10 providers in each offer programs and services. Moreover, while there are 39 safety-net providers in the group, most are in Erie County. None exist in several rural counties where residents may be close to an hour or more away from the nearest behavioral health services.

Health Care Providers

Home Health Care

Exactly 57 home health care providers exist in the eight-county region. This includes three suppliers of home health equipment and supplies. The larger majority offer in-home nursing, health aide and homemaker services. Over half of providers are located in Erie County, concentrated in areas where Medicaid population densities are highest. Yet notable gaps exist in the county's more rural southtowns and east towns, including in areas where Medicaid population densities are notable.

Service capacity is also scarce outside of Erie County, where in each county, six or fewer home health providers are located. Limited access to in-home services in these areas could potentially contribute to otherwise avoidable care in nursing homes and residential rehabilitation facilities.

On the upside, 40 out of the 57 provider locations are safety-net providers, where 35% or more of patient volumes reflect those insured by Medicaid or lacking insurance altogether. Among the largest of the safety-net providers, in terms of employment, are Visiting Nursing Association (VNA) of Western New York (based in Williamsville) and Catholic Health System's McAuley Seton Home Care (based in Cheektowaga).

Health Care Providers

Dental Health Providers

Over 1,300 dental health providers exist across Western New York. About nine out of 10 are private-practice dentists and dental offices. The region also boasts a dental school, the University at Buffalo School of Dental Medicine.

Dental health providers are generally present in areas where Medicaid population densities are highest, with the exception of visible gaps on the East Side of Buffalo, selected neighborhoods in Niagara Falls, Albion (in Orleans County) and spots in Cattaraugus and Allegany Counties. Indeed, the region's most rural counties have under 20 providers each to serve their entire populations, with 8 in Wyoming, 14 in Orleans and 17 in Allegany. Moreover, these rural areas have no safety-net providers, which are rare among this group of 1,339. Only four in all are safety-net providers, with two located in Buffalo, one in Jamestown and the fourth in Dunkirk.

Rather, many private dental practices are located in Erie County's suburbs, where average household incomes across the region are highest and where households are more likely to have dental insurance and/or the capacity to pay out of pocket.

Health Care Providers

Pharmacies

Over 500 pharmacy locations exist across Western New York. Exactly 255 are unique providers. The difference reflects multiple locations of major retail outlets with pharmacies such as Rite Aid and CVS.

Pharmacy locations are generally concentrated in areas where Medicaid population densities are highest, with the exception of visible gaps on the East Side of Buffalo and in selected Niagara Falls neighborhoods. Yet only 10 out of the 508 total are safety-net providers, where the uninsured, Medicaid enrollees, and dual eligible account for 35% of total patient volumes. Safety-net pharmacies are concentrated in Erie County's urban core (5 out of the 10 are in Buffalo). Niagara Falls and Jamestown also have one each.

Regionwide, six out of ten pharmacies - 317 in all - are in Erie county. Meanwhile ten or fewer options for filling prescriptions exist in rural counties, including Allegany (10 pharmacies), Orleans (9 pharmacies) and Wyoming (9 pharmacies). These locations are, however, closely aligned with where Medicaid patients reside, fostering access for the most vulnerable in these rural areas.

Health Care Providers

Rehabilitation Services

This category includes a diverse mix of 30 drug and alcohol addiction rehabilitation services, along with sites for physical rehabilitation services related to physical therapy, orthopedic surgery and other conditions.

What is revealed are the limited opens for rehabilitation outside of the metropolitan core. Nothing exists in Orleans County, or south of the Fredonia/Dunkirk area in Chautauqua County where there is a single provider.

Fourteen of the total - about half - are safety-net providers, offering services to relatively larger volumes of Medicaid and other economically vulnerable patients. It's a proportion of safety-net providers that is higher than in other health care specialty areas, pointing to a health care need among Medicaid patients that may be comparatively high relative to the general population.

Health Care Providers

Skilled Nursing, Assisted Living and Offices for the Aging

Nearly 150 providers offer skilled nursing care and residential assisted living services. The group also includes a half dozen agencies on aging. Among the largest, in terms of employment, are Genesee County Nursing Home, Beechwood Nursing Home and Highpointe on Michigan. Across facility locations, 115 is the median number of employees.

Two out of three of the 149 total are located in Erie and Niagara Counties. These providers are relatively less concentrated in urban locales where Medicaid population densities are highest and comparatively more commonly found in suburban locations.

This is true even of the 85 safety-net providers in the group, representing more than half the total, indicative of where large numbers of Medicaid dollars are directed. Safety-net providers are present in all eight counties, and even in Erie county's suburban and more rural areas. Also noteworthy is how these providers outnumber those providing home health and transportation services in most rural counties, services that would expand health care options for home-bound seniors who no longer drive.

Health Care Providers

Specialty Care: Pediatrics

Slightly over 200 health care providers for children exist in the region. These include pediatricians, clinics, hospital-based practices and other provider sites. Most are small private practices with a median of three employees.

With a critical mass of providers existing in Erie County - three out of four of the total - health services for children are strongest here, particularly in the City of Buffalo and surrounding suburbs. On the other hand, less than a handful of pediatric specialists exist in the most rural counties of Western New York. Allegany, Genesee, Orleans and Wyoming have less than five providers each.

About one out of six or 16% are safety-net providers, offering services to large volumes of children and families covered by Medicaid, dual insured or uninsured. Most of these providers are located in Erie and Niagara County. Genesee and Wyoming on the region's eastern border have no pediatric safety-net providers.

Health Care Providers

Specialty Care: Internal Medicine

The region has over 460 health care providers specializing in internal medicine, trained to address a broad spectrum of primary care needs in adults, from prevention to management of chronic illness. Most are small private practices with just a few employees (three is the median).

Internal medicine specialists are concentrated where population densities are highest, in Erie County, particularly Buffalo and northern suburbs. Three out of four providers are located in Erie County, a percentage that is disproportionately high against Erie County's 60% share of the region's total population.

Fewer than a dozen providers are located in rural Allegany, Genesee, Orleans and Wyoming Counties. Moreover, not a single safety-net provider is located in two of these counties: Orleans and Genesee, creating gaps in this component of primary care for the most vulnerable.

Health Care Providers

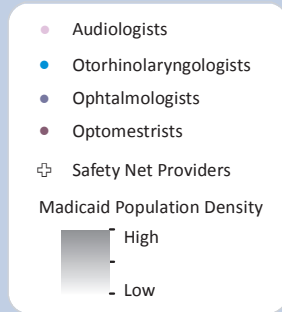

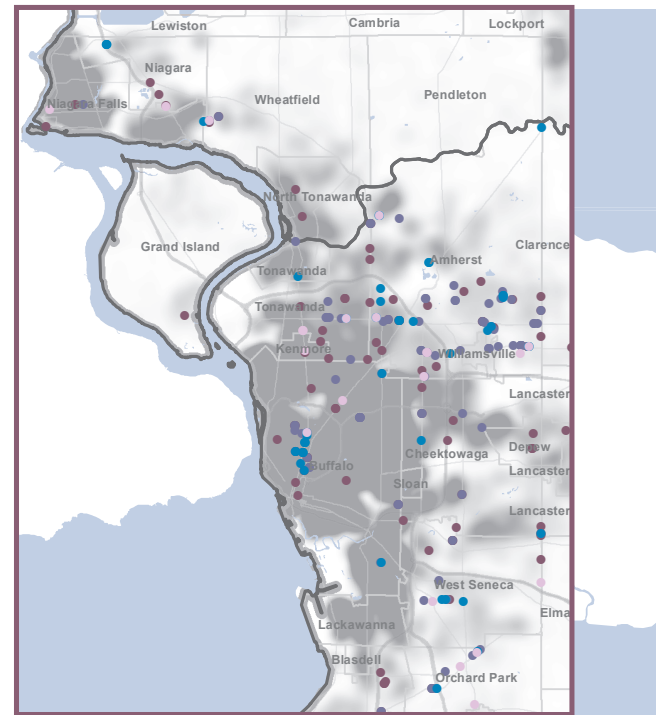

Specialty Care: Audiologists, Optometrists, Ophthalmologists and Otorhinolaryngologists

This category of providers treat diseases and disorders that affect the ability to hear, see, speak, swallow and smell. Over 360 providers and provider sites exist for these health care specialties in Western New York. Optometrists are the most common and reflect 40% of the total.

Close to seven out of ten of these specialists are located in Erie County. They are less concentrated than selected other health professionals in the City of Buffalo and inner-ring suburbs where poverty and Medicaid populations are highest. Similarly, highest poverty areas in Niagara Falls have few providers.

Outside the metropolitan core, specialty services are limited, if available at all. For instance, no audiology services were identified in Allegany, Genesee and/or Orleans Counties. Genesee and Orleans also have no otorhinolaryngology specialists.

Only 2% of these specialists are safety-net providers, serving large volumes of Medicaid populations. None were identified in five out of the region's eight counties, including Erie, the largest county of the region.

Specialty Care: Oncologists/ Cancer Treatment, Neurologists and Dermatologists

This category includes specialists who treat diseases and disorders related to cancer, the nervous system and the skin. Exactly 213 providers and provider sites across the region fall into one of these specialties.

Neurology specialists are more common than the others, accounting for over half of the total. Three-quarters of the 200+ identified are located in Erie County, but disproportionately less concentrated in the City of Buffalo compared to suburbs like Amherst where a larger concentration exists.

Specialty services in these areas are limited, if available at all, across southern Erie County as well as outside the county. None of these specialists exist, for instance in Allegany or Orleans Counties.

Access for those covered by Medicaid is also limited, with few safety-net providers existing across the region. Only 11 altogether - 5% of the total - were identified, and none exist in four out of the eight counties.

Health Care Providers

Specialty Care: Cardiologists and Hematologists

This category includes physicians and other health care providers who specialize in treating diseases and disorders of the heart and blood. Over 160 providers and sites for these services exist in Western New York.

People and places for cardiology care outnumber those for hematology diagnosis and treatment by six to one. Across all specialists, seven out of ten are located in Erie County. While some are in Buffalo where Medicaid populations are high, concentrations are notable in suburbs like Tonawanda, Amherst and Orchard Park.

Yet south of Orchard Park specialty services are limited, at best, in Erie County. Access is also limited outside of Erie County where about a dozen specialists, at most, exist in any one county. Only two or three options for specialized cardiac care exist in Allegany, Genesee and Orleans, despite the prevalence of heart disease across the region.

Few cardiology and/or hematology specialists treat large volumes of Medicaid, dual eligible or uninsured patients. Only 12 safety-net providers in all were identified.

Health Care Providers

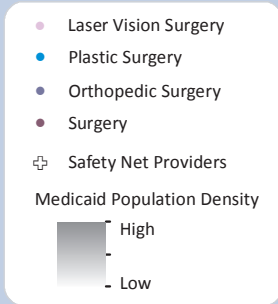

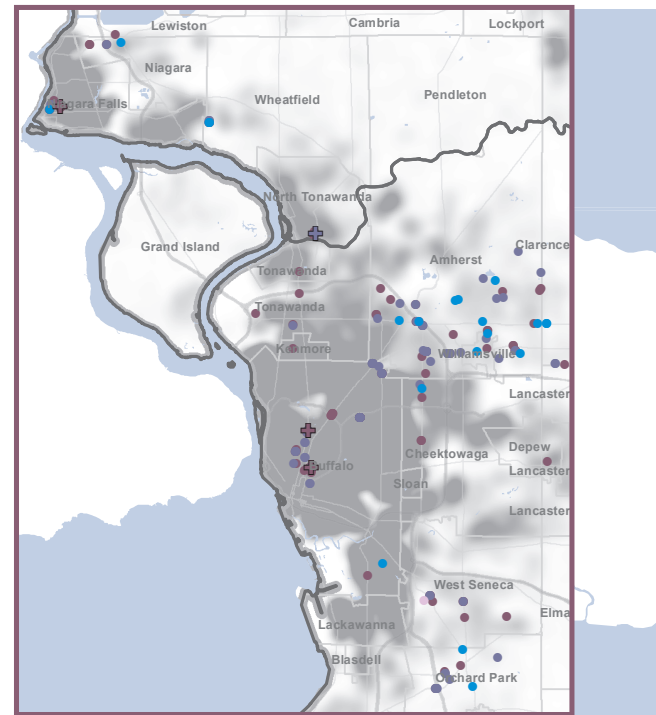

Specialty Care: Surgery Doctors

Over 310 surgeons and surgical practices exist in Western New York, including five providers of laser vision surgery, 116 providers of orthopedic surgery, 24 plastic surgeons and related practices and 166 general surgeon specialists and related providers.

Two out of three of those identified are in Erie County, with concentrations in Buffalo, Amherst and Orchard Park.

Allegany, Genesee, Orleans and Wyoming are comparatively underserved, with fewer than a half dozen specialty providers in each of these counties. Residents in these more rural areas are more likely to have to travel long distances to seek medical treatment and second opinions related to surgery.

Across the region, few surgeons treat large volumes of Medicaid patients. Only 15 safety-net providers were identified within this specialty. Every county except Allegany has at least one safety-net provider.

Health Care Providers

Specialty Care: Urologists, Endocrinologists, Nephrologists, Dialysis and Gastroenterologists

This cluster of specialties includes physicians and other health care providers who focus on the treatment of diseases and disorders of the kidneys, gastrointestinal tract, hormones and the urinary and endocrine systems. Slightly over 200 of these specialists and specialty practices were identified. Gastroenterology and urology specialists account for nearly three out of four.

Seven out of ten of these specialists are located in Erie County, with clusters in Buffalo, Amherst, West Seneca and Orchard Park. Relatively few specialists are located in peripheral towns and counties. Only one or two specialists serve the entire populations in Allegany, Genesee, Orleans and Wyoming Counties. Rather, travel to Erie County is likely needed by residents in rural areas in need of this specialty care.

Options are particularly limited for those on Medicaid, according to the few (13) safety-net providers identified in this group. Several larger safety-net providers are in Erie County and include Buffalo General Hospital, Erie County Medical Center and the Dialysis Center of Western New York. Several rural counties lack a single safety-net provider.

Health Care Providers

Specialty Care: Podiatrists

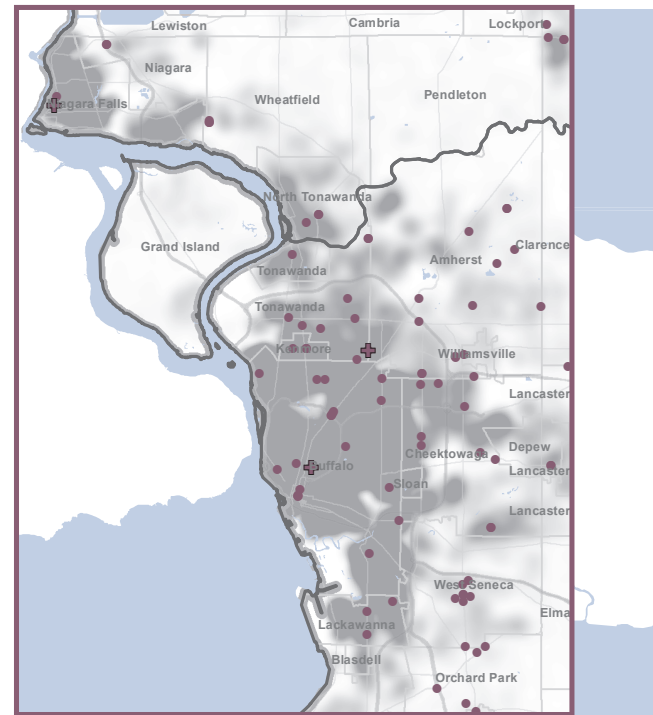

Podiatrists and podiatry service providers treat diseases and disorders of the feet. Some conditions are related to common chronic diseases such as diabetes, and proper treatment can lessen the likelihood of amputation.

Over 140 specialists in this service category were identified. Most are small private practices with under 5 employees.

Two thirds of podiatry specialists are located in Erie County, scattered across Buffalo and inner-ring suburbs, with relatively few south of Orchard Park or east of Clarence/Lancaster.

Less than five podiatrists are available to treat entire populations in Allegany, Cattaraugus, Genesee, Orleans or Wyoming Counties.

Options for Medicaid-covered populations are even more limited, with only six safety-net specialists for the entire region. With the exception of podiatry services at Buffalo General Hospital, most safety-net providers are individual podiatrists, and no safety-net services are available in four out of the region's eight counties.

Health Care Providers

Specialty Care: Ob/Gyn

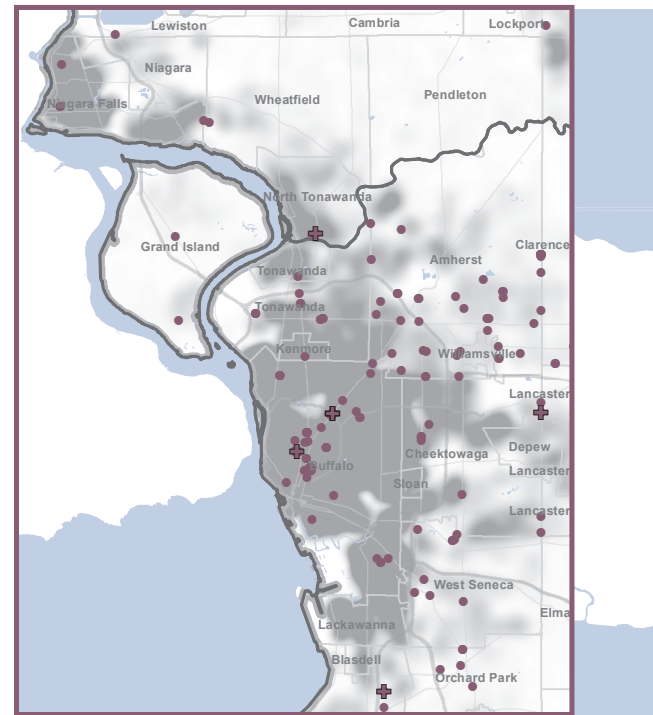

This specialty offers a variety of health services for women, especially women of child-bearing age. Over 230 obstetrics and gynecology practitioners and practices were identified across Western New York.

Three-quarters are located in Erie County, a proportion that exceeds Erie County's 60% population share. Amherst and the Main Street corridor in Buffalo are where many are located. Few providers are located in the county's more rural outskirts, east of Clarence or south of Orchard Park.

Only 25 providers are based in Niagara County. This is one provider for every 1,600 women of child-bearing age in the county.

Specialty services for women are limited, too, in more rural counties of the region where six or few providers exist in each, perhaps contributing to comparatively low rates of breast cancer screening and cervical cancer screening among women in these counties.

Options for those on Medicaid are even more limited with only 18 safety-net providers in the group of 232. This is about one out of twelve. While there is at least one safety-net provider in every county, the largest number exists in Erie County.

Health Care Providers

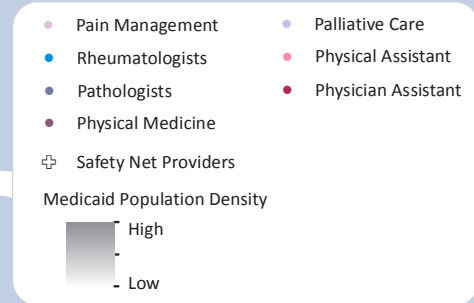

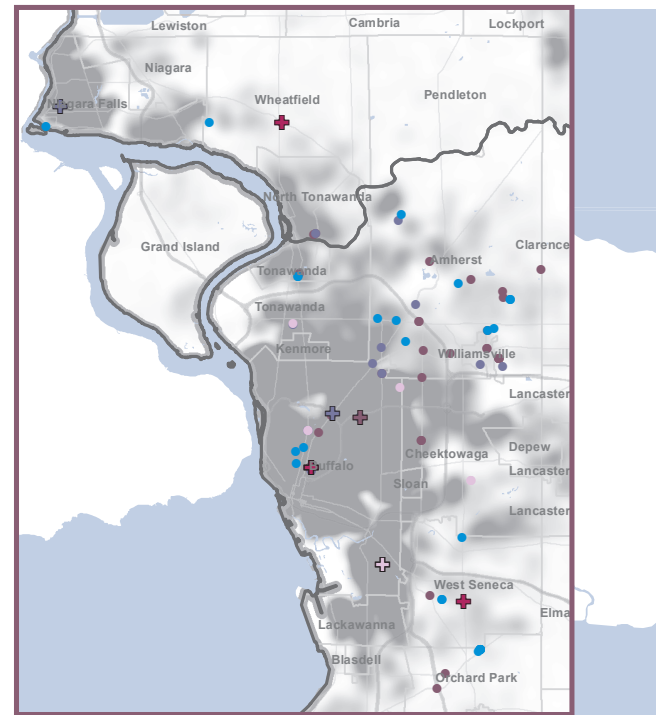

Specialty Care: Physical Medicine

This group of 144 includes specialists in physical and sports medicine, pain management, rheumatology and pathology. While some larger practices exist, most are smaller private practices or solo practitioners with under five employees.

Three out of four are located in Erie County. Comparatively larger numbers exist in Amherst and Buffalo. Options for care are limited for residents in all other counties, where a dozen or fewer exist in each.

Residents in Allegany, Genesee, Orleans and Wyoming have no more than three options for specialty care. Access to physical medicine may be one of the reasons why over half of survey respondents in Allegany, Cattaraugus, Orleans and Wyoming Counties report living with pain or joint problems that began over three months ago.

Twenty safety-net providers were identified. This is 14% of the total, a slightly larger proportion than exist within selected other medical specialties. There is at least one safety-net provider in all counties of the region except Orleans.

Specialty Care: Others

Over 260 health care providers in specialties not otherwise covered offer services to residents in Western New York. The group includes 84 providers of anesthesiology services, 35 allergy and immunology service providers, 31 pulmonary disease specialists and 5 geriatric practices.

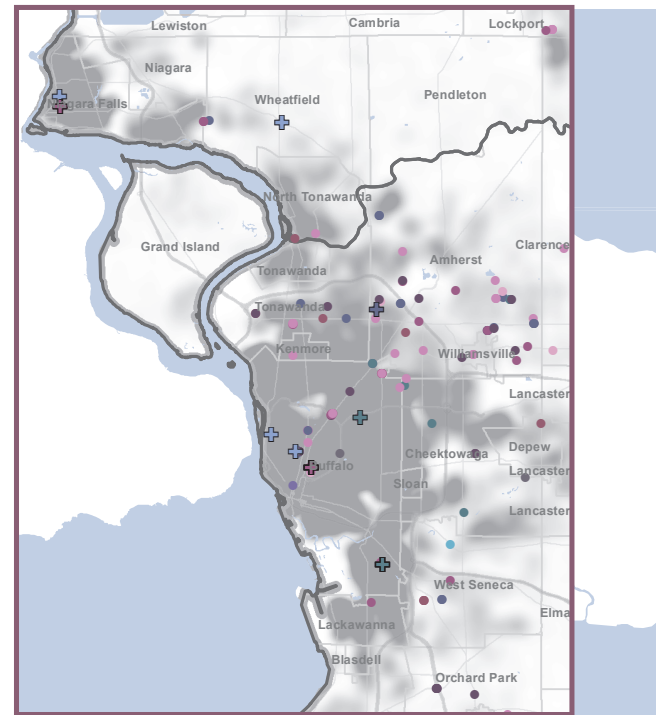

Seven out of ten are located in Erie County, with larger numbers in Buffalo, Tonawanda and Amherst.

Relatively few of these specialist exist outside Erie County, particularly in the most rural counties. A half dozen or less are present in Allegany, Genesee, Orleans and Wyoming, leaving notable gaps. For instance, the Southern Tie Counties have the highest percentages of residents over age 65. Yet not one geriatric specialist was identified in these counties.

Similarly, in counties such as Allegany, Genesee, Orleans and Wyoming where farm labor is common and work-related injuries may be more likely, there are no specialists in occupational medicine.

In Orleans, Cattaraugus, Wyoming and Genesee, there are no pulmonary disease specialists, despite high rates of avoidable hospitalizations among populations in these counties related to chronic obstructive pulmonary disease and asthma.

Moreover, a relatively small fraction of the total - 15% are safety-net providers, treating larger volumes of Medicaid populations and others who are economically vulnerable.

Community Support Providers

Criminal Justice/Crime Prevention

Providers of criminal justice and crime prevention services help to foster safer and healthier communities. Crime prevention also reduces barriers to employment that those in the system experience and the adverse impacts of crime on victims.

Close to 160 criminal justice and crime prevention supports exist in the region. Many are government-operated entities - probation departments, local courts and police departments - that offer crime prevention programs and alternatives to incarceration for at-risk populations.

About half (52% of the total number) are concentrated in Erie and Niagara Counties where Medicaid population densities are most pronounced and where rates of violent and other crime are highest. These metropolitan counties are home to the largest of these supports, in terms of overall employment, and include Erie County Department of Probation, the Cheektowaga Police Department and the Niagara County Sheriff.

Outside the urban core, 76 provider locations exist, with largest numbers in Chautauqua. This county has 25 criminal justice and crime prevention organizations, versus 7-10 in each of the other more rural counties outside Erie and Niagara. Both Allegany and Genesee County have under 10 providers each - not concentrated where Medicaid population densities are highest - even though rates of violent crime in Genesee County are close to the higher rates that exist in Chautauqua County.

Community Support Providers

Education: Employment Services

There are 196 locations offering education and training to residents to help them gain meaningful employment. Only one of these sites is classified as a Safety Net provider – Spectrum Human Services in Tonawanda.

Employment services are concentrated around major population centers, especially in Erie County which alone holds eighty percent of all employment education and training services in Western New York. Orleans, Genesee and Wyoming counties are all relatively underserved by employment training services with only four providers total existing in these three counties.

Employment service providers are not uniformly well-aligned with high concentrations of Medicaid enrollees. The most visible gap appears over Albion in Orleans County which has a dense population of Medicaid beneficiaries with the nearest employment service provider over ten miles away in Medina. Other mentionable gaps in coverage include Franklinville in Cattaraugus County, and Westfield in Chautauqua County. The villages of Warsaw and Perry are both in close proximity to the one employment service provider in that Wyoming County, though it is isolated from the Attica population.

Community Support Providers

Education: Libraries

Libraries are oftentimes community hubs offering access to books, information, computers, technology, training, youth programs, community programming and more for all residents within a community.

Exactly 160 exist in Western New York. Unlike other service providers that are often disproportionately represented in Erie County, only 40% of library locations identified across the region are in Erie County. However, the largest libraries, in terms of employment, do exist in the metropolitan core - Buffalo, Amherst, Cheektowaga, North Tonawanda and Niagara Falls.

That said, the majority of libraries in Western New York are located in the region's five most rural counties, generally situated in population centers where Medicaid enrollee numbers are highest. Only one library - DVA-WNY Healthcare Library in Batavia (Genesee County) - is designated as a safety-net provider.

Education: Higher Education

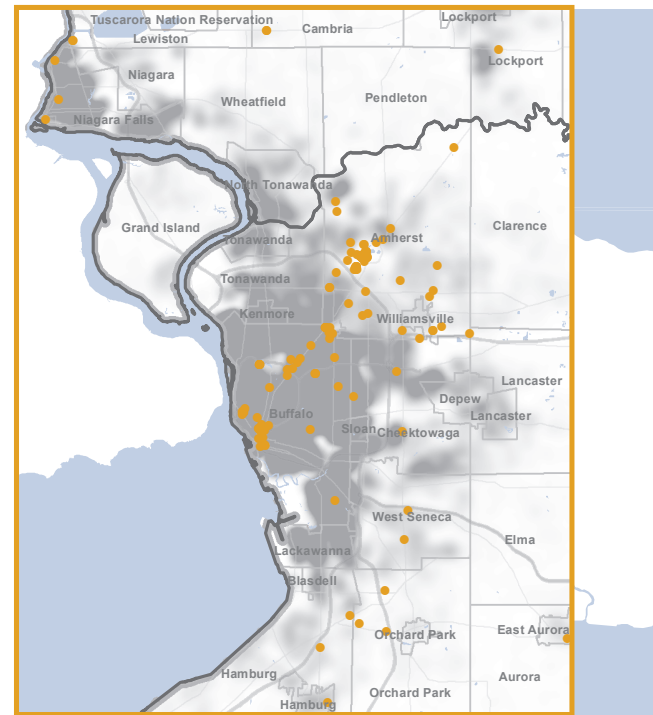

Higher education is a strength of the region and attaining a college degree expands opportunities for higher-wage employment. At the core are 22 degree-granting institutions of higher education in Western New York.

Many offer educational and other programming at various sites, which are shown on the maps here. The inventory also includes selected higher educational supports such as a college-related research foundation and a college-based technology incubator.

Altogether, just over 201 sites for higher education were identified. Services are strongest in Erie County where seven out of ten providers are located.

Significantly fewer options exist in Cattaraugus, Genesee, Orleans and Wyoming Counties. With the exception of Genesee County, none of these rural counties has even a community college, the most affordable option for a two-year degree. This may create barriers to higher education and better-paying jobs, especially for adults in households in these areas without a vehicle.

Not one institution of higher education is designated as a safety-net provider.

Education: Parochial Education

Nearly 190 parochial schools exist across Western New York. These are private - often faith-based - schools providing elementary and secondary education to students.

Over eight out of ten are located in Erie and Niagara Counties. Many can be found in the Cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls where poverty and Medicaid enrollee numbers are high.

While parochial schools are community assets, offering an alternative to public education and strong opportunities for learning, none of the schools identified are designated as safety-net providers, offering services to larger volumes of Medicaid covered students. Rather, the tuition to attend these schools commonly creates access barriers for poorer families.

Relatively few parochial schools are located in rural, less populated counties, where public school districts rank higher than in the largest urban areas and where population densities may not be sufficient to support the operations of these schools at levels that are affordable to families in the vicinity.

Community Support Providers

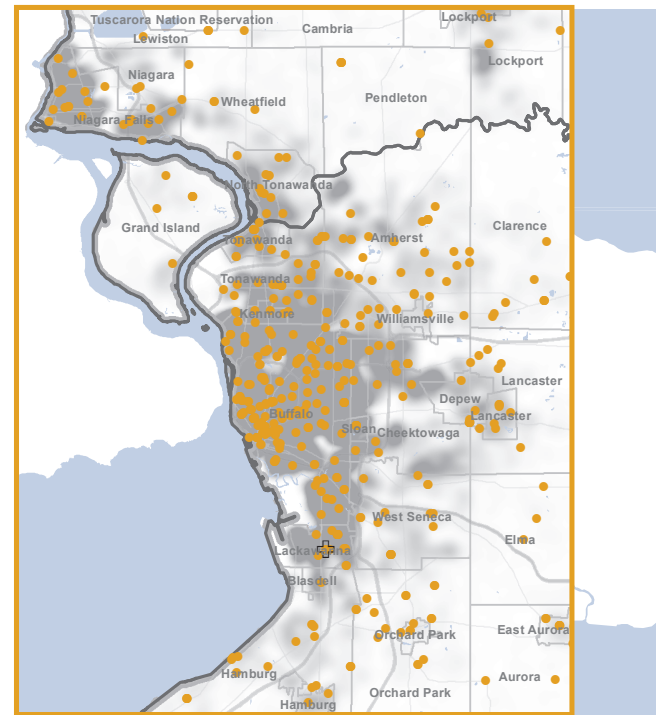

Education: Primary Schools

Public primary schools are critical community resources, offering not only primary education to youth in the district but also, commonly, before- and after-school programs, outreach to parents, community programming, family resource centers, food for children, and transportation services. Primary schools can oftentimes be a key community partner in programs for children and families.

The eight-county region has just under 100 public school districts, and oftentimes, each of these is comprised of many schools - elementary, middle and high - at different locations. Altogether, 786 locations were identified. The median number of employees at each is just over 50.

Just over half of primary school locations are in Erie County, a proportion that is slightly lower than Erie County's 60% share of the total regional population. About a quarter of this number - 100 - exist in Niagara County. And about a third of locations are in the six most rural counties, exceeding their 26% population share and suggesting the important role schools play in rural communities particularly.

Only one primary school - Baker Hall School at Baker Victory Services in Lackawanna - is designated as a safety-net provider, offering education services to larger volumes of Medicaid-covered children.

Community Support Providers

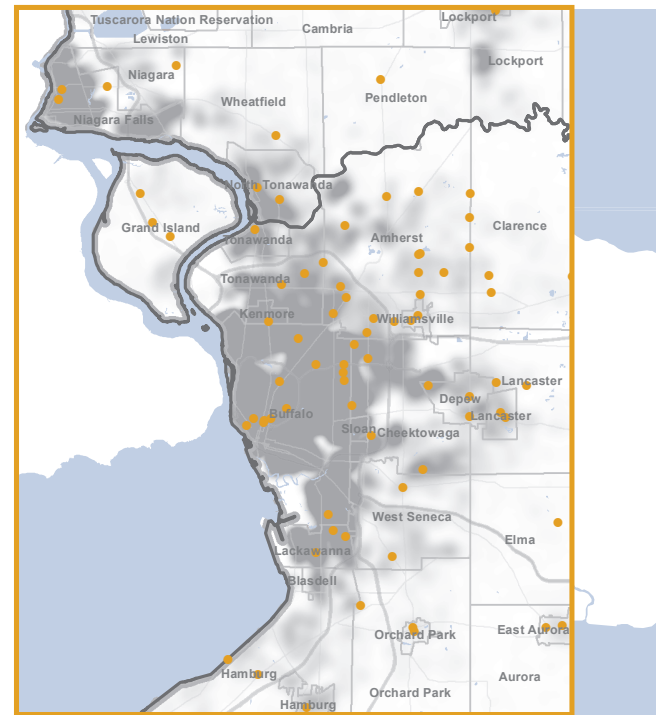

Education: Early Education

Early education lays a foundation for a child's ability to succeed in school in later years. It's a particularly important support for economically vulnerable families who may not have the capacity to afford other opportunities for their children to develop basic learning skills.

Altogether, 128 early education programs were identified across Western New York. These include nursery schools, preschools, Head Starts, and other pre-kindergarten programs. Only one - the early childhood center run by Chautauqua Opportunities, Inc in Jamestown - is a safety-net provider, serving comparatively larger volumes of Medicaid-covered children.

Three out of four early childhood programs are found in Erie and Niagara Counties, present where Medicaid concentrations are highest but also in wealthier inner-ring suburbs such as the Town of Amherst. Yet the largest early childhood program in Erie County, based on employee numbers, is at the Preschool Learning Center in the Village of Springville.

Outside the metropolitan core, 32 programs exist, generally located in population centers where Medicaid enrollee numbers are highest. Notable gaps exist in Allegany, Genesee, Orleans and Wyoming County where fewer than five early childhood programs exist for the entire county. With the exception of the Rainbow School in Albion (Orleans County), all of the other programs are relatively small, employing 15 or fewer workers at each.

Community Support Providers

Education: Specialty and BOCES

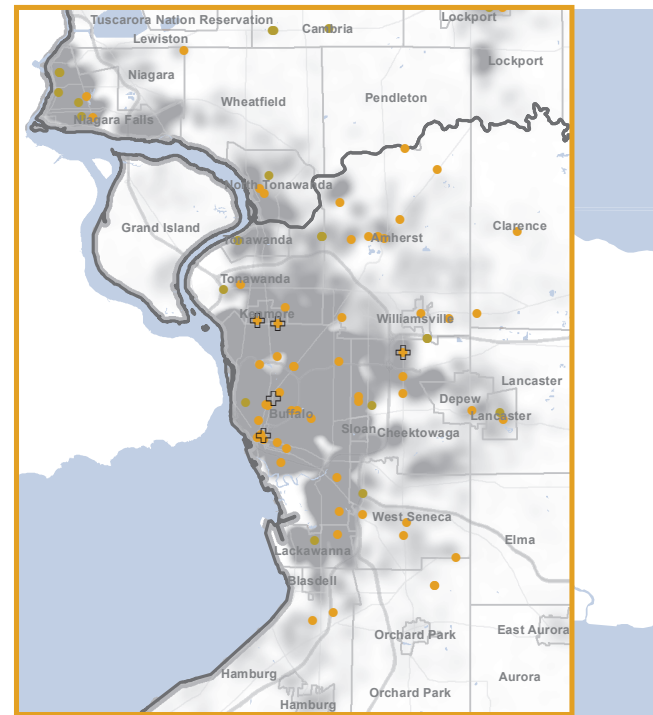

For youth who are not college bound and adults who need retraining, specialty schools and BOCES offer opportunities to learn a trade and cultivate skills that open doors to career pathways and higher-paying employment.

Just under 180 locations for specialty and BOCES services were identified across Western New York. This group includes BOCES programs, vocational training programs (such as the Manufacturing Technology Institute), alternative education centers, and sites for special education (such as St. Mary's School for the Deaf).

Only six of the total are designated as safety-net providers, offering services to relatively large volumes of Medicaid-covered residents. Most in this small group offer training and related supports to individuals with a disability.

Across the larger group, about six out of ten sites are located in Erie County. So is the largest service provider in the region, in terms of employment, which is Erie 1 BOCES based in the Town of West Seneca.

While every county has a site for BOCES, these locations don't always align with where Medicaid enrollee numbers are highest. This may create access barriers, particularly for adults without a flexible form of transportation but in need of affordable training or retooling of their skills.

Community Support Providers

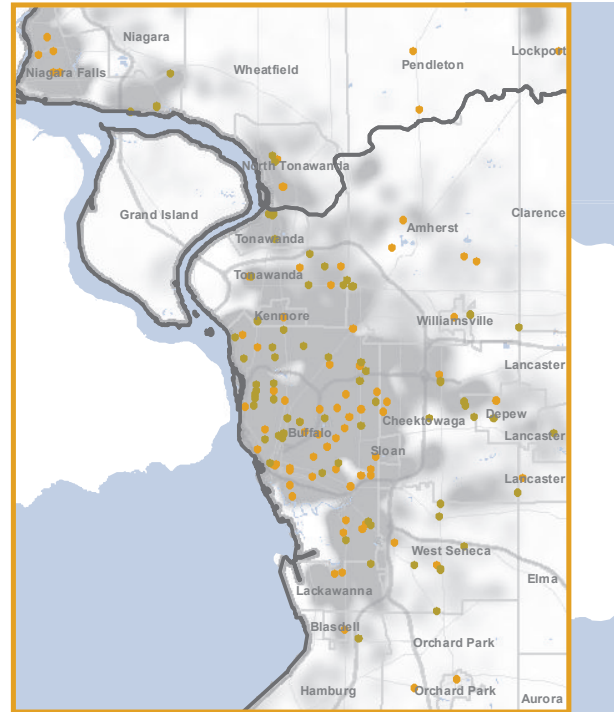

Food/Clothing and Goods

With low access to food in many areas of the region, supports for affordable food and other basic needs offer a critical support service.

Exactly 259 food and clothing sites exist across the region. These are places where residents can find affordable food and clothing at thrift stores, clothing closets, farmer's markets, senior nutrition sites, food pantries, Meals on Wheels programs and more. Region-wide, locations offering affordable food, including farmer's markets, just slightly outnumber those providing affordable clothing and goods. Based in Erie County and offering affordable food to homebound seniors, Meals on Wheels is one of the region's largest food providers, in terms of employment. Goodwill Industries is the largest among clothing/good supports.

Overall, six out of 10 sites are located in Erie County, where low food access and Medicaid population densities are most pronounced. Only a fraction of this number exist in other counties, even in Niagara County where food access is low relative to other counties in the region and comparable counties across the state.

Options are also extremely limited in the region's most rural counties - with 6 or fewer sites for food in each of Allegany, Genesee, Orleans and Wyoming Counties. It reveals a notable gap, particularly in Wyoming County where access to food is lower than in other counties and lower than in comparable counties across the state.

Health and Wellness

Seventy-eight health and wellness organizations and sites exist across Western New York. This group includes not-for-profit, governmental and faith-based providers offering programs that raise awareness and funding and provide support, education and screen services to residents. Examples include the Cancer Wellness Center, the Alzheimer’s Association and the Lead Prevention Coalition.

Seven out of 10 providers are located in Erie County, primarily concentrated where Medicaid population densities are highest in the City of Buffalo and northern inner-ring suburbs. Visible gaps do exist, though, for vulnerable populations in South Buffalo and Lackawanna.

A small cluster of providers also exists in Niagara Falls. Meanwhile, none were identified in Genesee and Wyoming Counties, and only one or two exist in Allegany and Orleans Counties.

Only one provider in this category is designated as safety-net providers, offering services to relatively large populations of Medicaid-insured residents. The Health Association of Niagara County, Inc. promotes health and wellness in Niagara County through initiatives such as senior companion program, a foster grandparent program, and an obesity-prevention program for children.

Community Support Providers

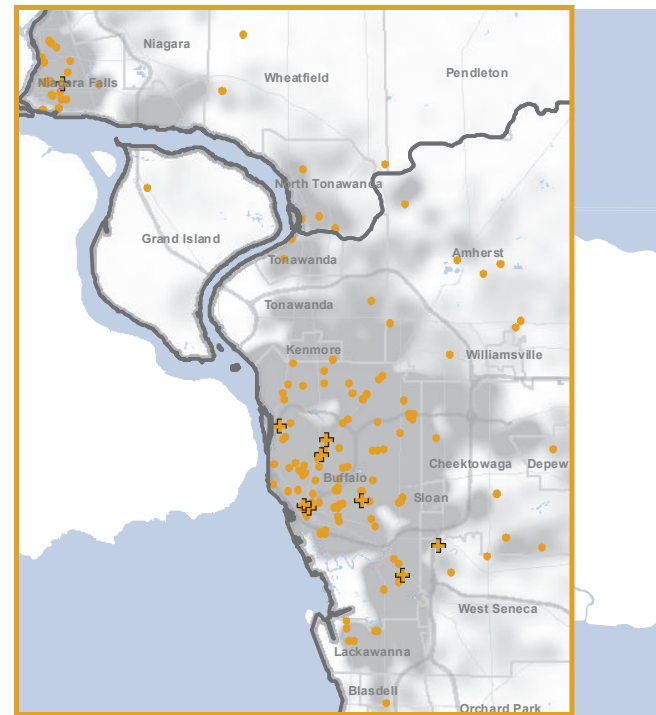

Housing

Health and housing are linked, with safe, affordable and healthy housing associated with fewer adverse health outcomes. This category includes 255 organizations and provider sites offering housing services to the homeless and vulnerable as well as advocacy organizations, housing assistance providers and public housing authorities. Some of these providers target their programs and services to select populations such as seniors, veterans and the disabled.

More than half of provider locations are in Erie County, concentrated in the City of Buffalo and its inner-ring suburbs. There is also a cluster in the City of Niagara Falls, and to a lesser extent, the City of Lockport.

Under 10 providers exist in more rural counties - Allegany, Genesee, Orleans and Wyoming, where there may be more of a need for housing supports for low-income homeowners versus renters.

Fifteen housing support organizations are safety-net providers, focused on the disabled and those in addiction recovery. The majority (8) are in Buffalo and each county has at least one safety-net provider with the exception of Cattaraugus and Wyoming Counties where none exist.

Community Support Providers

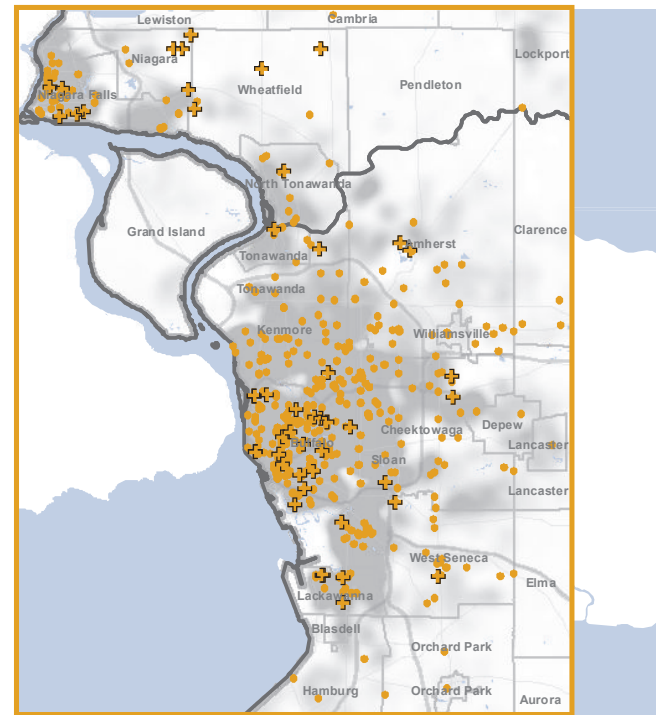

Social Services & Welfare

Over 800 social service and welfare organizations and organizational sites exist in Western New York, offering programs and services that respond to myriad social problems. Examples include Catholic Charities, Journey's End Refugee Services, the United Way of Buffalo and Erie County, Senior Outreach Services and community action organizations.

Two out of three are located in Erie County, concentrated in the City of Buffalo and, to a lesser extent, inner ring suburbs, particularly the Towns of Cheektowaga and West Seneca. Niagara Falls also has a concentration, with 125 across Niagara County altogether.

Meanwhile, two dozen or fewer social service organizations are present in each of three counties - Genesee, Orleans and Wyoming. In the region's southern counties - Chautauqua, Cattaraugus and Allegany, where poverty rates are arguably the most pressing regionally - between two and five dozen sites exist in each county, generally concentrated where Medicaid population densities are visibly large.

Across the group of 807, 79 are safety-net providers, with many serving population segments that are disabled, senior or in addiction recovery. Several are community action organizations, as well. Orleans, Genesee and Cattaraugus Counties are the only three with no safety-net providers.

System Integration and Management

This category includes entities that oversee a variety of health programs and foster the integration of health and other services for patients and population. Included are public health programs, health maintenance organizations, information exchanges, and health networks. The landscape of these services sheds light on key players in system integration, something that is particularly important for vulnerable individuals who oftentimes face myriad barriers (economic, educational, linguistic, travel-related, etc.) to the care they need.

Just over 100 provider sites were identified across Western New York. The largest, in terms of employment, are all in Erie County and include the Erie County Department of Health, Fidelis Care and Senior Choice.

Thirteen locations are designated as safety-net providers, offering services to proportionally larger volumes of Medicaid-insured populations. More than not are county health and/or mental health departments in several different counties.

Six out of ten provider sites are located in Erie County, generally in or near populations where Medicaid enrollments are highest. Under six service provider sites exist in Allegany, Genesee, Orleans, and Wyoming Counties. Moreover, only one county in the region - Allegany - has a rural health network that seeks to bring together residents, providers and community partners for the purpose of improving health and well being in the community.

Community Support Organizations

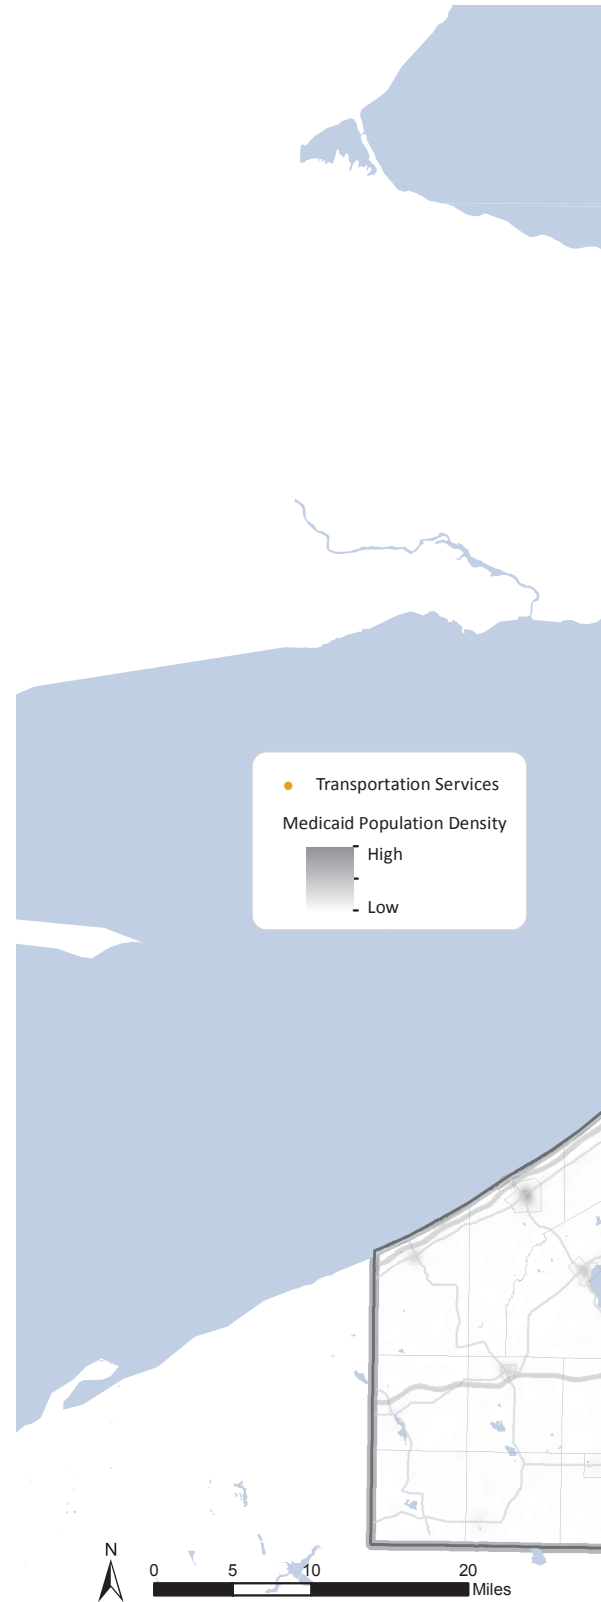

Transportation Support Resources

Less than two dozen transportation providers exist across the region for the approximately 74,400 households in WNY that do not have access to a vehicle and rely on alternative modes for traveling to services, work and other destinations.

Providers that exist are concentrated in Erie County, many where Medicaid population densities are highest. Only two or three operations exist in other counties, including Niagara County, where in Niagara Falls proportions without a vehicle run as high as 57% of households in selected Zip Codes. In Cattaraugus County, there are no transportation providers for the nearly 3,000 households there without a car.

In addition, the majority of transportation providers that exist across the region offer options for the disabled or for medical purposes. Based in Erie County, We Care is one of the largest providers in this category, offering transportation to health and human services for wheelchair-bound and special needs residents.

Choices for lower-income, able-bodied individuals are sparse, if they exist at all, outside of public transit where it exists. This can create very practical geographic barriers to health and health-promoting resources.

Community Support Providers

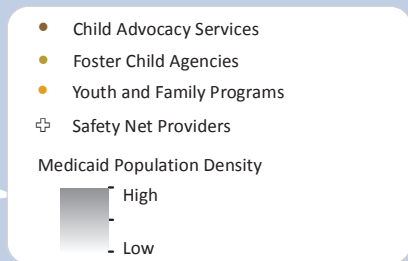

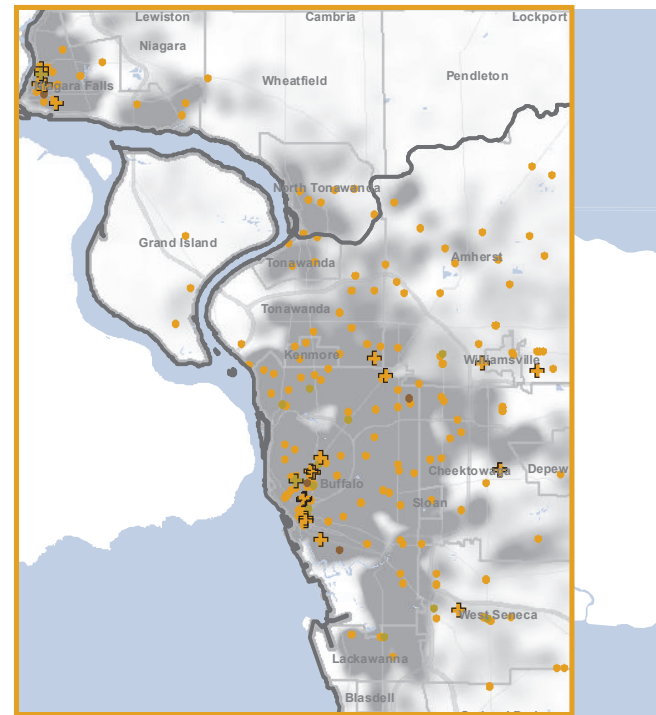

Youth/Family Programs, Child Advocacy and Foster Child Agencies

The region has more than 400 organizations and sites providing services for children and families. The group includes 5 child advocacy organizations, 30 foster child agencies and 379 youth and family programs, including community centers, family resource sites, and youth development programs. In terms of employment, the YMCA, YWCA, and Cheektowaga Youth Services are among the largest.

Erie County has the largest number of providers, with most concentrated north of Lackawanna in the City of Buffalo and surrounding suburbs. A smaller cluster exists in Niagara Falls.

Only a handful of youth and family service providers are present in Genesee, Orleans and Wyoming County, even though proportions of more vulnerable single parent families are higher in Orleans than in any other county regionally.

Close to two dozen of all sites are safety-net providers, with all in Erie and Niagara Counties.
